I was on the Simpson-Bowles Commission, I was a member of the Gang of 6, I have worked in a bipartisan fashion with anybody who will work with me to try to solve the big problems in front of our country, except we as a body, and the House, really don't want to solve them because the thing put at risk when you really solve them is political careers, and as a group of politicians, the people in Washington care much more about their careers—by their actions it is proven—than they do about the long-term fiscal health of this country. That applies to both parties.

So when we have a deal brought before us that will avoid confrontation come January 15 and we have all sorts of budget gimmicks in it that are not truthful, they are not real, in the hopes that somebody will grow a backbone 9 and 10 years from now and actually keep their word to the American public—and we are demonstrating right now we can't even keep our word from 2 years ago—why would we be proud to vote for that? Does it solve a real problem? No. It puts a real problem off and actually makes the problem worse to the tune of $68 billion. Through this bill we will borrow an additional $68 billion, $50 billion of it, close to, in the next year and $20 billion some after that, and in the year after, and then hope and pray that Congresses that follow us will do what we suggested.

Everyone in this body knows that is not going to happen. So when you vote on this bill you are voting for your political career, you are voting for the Washington establishment, but you are not voting for the person out there who now has a $57,000 debt they are servicing, and their family, $1 million per household in this country in unfunded liabilities.

It will pass. I have no doubt it will pass. I feel like John the Baptist in the wilderness. But mark my words. If we continue to do what we are doing today, we will be remembered as the people who could have fixed the problem and didn't; who could have made the courageous decisions and chose not to; who could have stiffened their spines and said we don't care what Republican extremists or liberal extremists say, the future of our country is more important than any political career in this town. And what we have before us is just the opposite.

Why wasn't in part of this agreement some of the $250 billion that GAO has identified as waste, fraud, duplication, and mismanagement? There is not one thing in this bill that addresses one thing that GAO has recommended to Congress over the last 3 years—not one. So we have the “Wastebook”—$31 billion of what I would consider—and it is not partisan. There could be a difference in terms of agreement about what is important and what is not. But, again, I would say in terms of the “Wastebook,” it is: Should we be spending money now when we are borrowing money, in light of the fiscal situation that we have, on some of the things that we outlined? It is a listing of 100. It has $31 billion worth of savings. I will outline a few of them for you.

We are going to be taking up NDAA next. None of the amendments that I offered are in the NDAA. Every one of them was structural to the Pentagon to make it more responsible and accountable to its constitutional duty, which it has not performed, of giving account to Congress on how it spent its money. For example, the Army commissioned a contract to have a warfare overseeing blimp. They spent $297 million on that blimp. It flew for a short period of time in this country. We sold it back to the contractor for $300,000.

I have two questions: No. 1. Whoever signed that contract and made that decision, did they get fired from the Federal Government? Did they get demoted in rank? And, No. 2, was the contract actually executed to the requirements that the military set out for it?

It is called accountability. The answer to both of those is no. There is no accountability. So we are going to have an NDAA bill come through that requires them to meet an audit. They have been required since 1992 to meet an audit. They did not do it in 2014 and they will not do it in 2017 and they won't do it in 2018, because there is no hammer on the Pentagon to make them do it. That is because all hammers have been taken out because we don't want to force them to meet their constitutional responsibility. It is too hard.

We never told them it was too hard to go to Iraq or Afghanistan. But it is too hard for them to follow their constitutional duty to report on how they spend their money. What I would put before us is, if you cannot measure what you are doing, you cannot manage what you are doing. What is obvious from the waste, fraud, and abuse, contract failures within the Pentagon, is they have no clue on what they are doing. All you have to do is take the Dwight D. Eisenhower carrier, the littoral combat ships, the F-35—all of those major defense programs are at risk, over budget, behind schedule. I am not talking a little bit over budget. We did not do the oversight; we have not forced that. You will never get control of those programs until you make them be able to account for what they are doing.

My first training, my first degree, is in accounting. I understand the reason accounting is important is because it tells you where to go to manage your problems. The Pentagon cannot do that. The Pentagon ordered—at the insistence of us, by the way—some airplanes for Afghanistan. Guess what we have done. We have taken delivery here and we have sent them straight to the Arizona desert, just $422 million worth of them. By the way, the ones that did go to Afghanistan, we are going to cut up, destroy. We are not going to send them to Africa for relief missions. We are not going to send them somewhere else. We are going to cut them into pieces, another $200 million worth of airplanes. And by the way, since the Afghan Air Force wants the same thing America has, we have already given them two C130-Hs, and we are going to give them two more. That is another $400 million. So what we have done through poor management is waste over $700 million on one item.

There is nothing in this bill that corrects that. Yet this bill is going to come to the floor—the NDAA—and not one of us who actually knows what really needs to be done in terms of changing the financial picture in the Pentagon is going to have an opportunity to influence that bill—not one of us. It doesn't have to be that way. That bill came out of committee in May of last year, but we have chosen to operate that way.

Camp Leatherneck, which is in Afghanistan, is a $34 million new camp for troops, and it sits abandoned today. It has never been occupied. Who was the general or colonel who authorized that in anticipation of our drawdown? Who executed the order to build it and then ordered that we abandon it? Is there any accountability in the Pentagon or in any other agency? Are we doing our job of holding them accountable?

The “Wastebook” is not all about the Defense Department, but I brought a couple of those up just so we could see what is going on. The “Wastebook” is about poor judgment across all the agencies. You may disagree with me about some of what is in the “Wastebook,” but the question you have to ask yourself is: At a time when we have done what we have done to the American people in terms of unfunded liabilities, in terms of individual debt—the average family now has over $220,000 worth of debt that they have to pay back which we borrowed—should we spend money the way we spend it?

We spent $978,000 to study romance novels. Certainly that is a priority right now in our government. Everybody would agree with that; right? Sure they would. They would agree with it. Yet we put that contract out last year and spent money to study the background of romance novels, both on the Web and off, and why people write them. We didn't just study about them here, we studied about them everywhere.

How about $400,000 to Yale University, by the National Science Foundation, to actually study whether people who align with the tea party have the cognitive capability in terms of science? Guess what. We spent that money and the professor got the biggest surprise of his life. Here is what the study said: People who are aligned with the tea party have far exceptional cognitive abilities when it comes to science, math, and financial aptitude. It totally surprised the professor because the whole purpose was supposed to undermine people who are constitutional conservatives. Yet we spent $400,000 on that study.

Those are just a few of the small examples of the silliness which goes on. People say: Well, $400,000 isn't much; $900,000 isn't much. The State Department spent $500 million during the last week of the fiscal year. What did they spend it on? Does anybody know? To buy brand-new crystal stemware for all the embassies throughout the world. We didn't need new stemware, but we had to spend the money, so we spent it.

Just think about that. We are responsible for that. We allowed that to happen. There is no oversight here. There is no aggressiveness in terms of controlling costs, and our default position is our agreement on this budget which doesn't address any of those problems.

The American people are going to be asking questions about why we get along so well. The political story is not that Washington spends out of conflict and partisan bickering because the facts don't lie. We get along way too well. We are going to get along so well that we are going to pass another bill that solves the problem for us, as politicians, but, in fact, actually hurts the American people.

I am not going to be a part of that, and I am going to keep yelling from the canyons and from the mountain tops until we start doing what we are supposed to do because this is not going to change.

It is my hope that some of us will wake up and start looking at some of the real facts. So $30 billion can make a big difference. If we just eliminate the items in this “Wastebook” for next year, we would be able to take care of one-third of the sequester. There are just 100 items here. I can give you 300 items.

I can give you $150 billion worth of stupidity every year, but we choose not to do anything about it. We choose not to do anything about it because you have to be a committee chairman in order to have an oversight committee dig into this stuff. You actually have to do the hard work to find out where the administration is spending the money.

President Obama doesn't want money to be wasted this way. He needs our help. Yet we will not help him. We will not help the American people. Consequently, the future of our country is at risk when it should be gloriously great. It is at risk not because of the American people; it is at risk because of us. We ought to change that.

I yield the floor and note the absence of a quorum.

MAYORKAS NOMINATION

Ms. LANDRIEU. I appreciate the courtesies of the Senator from Washington, who is on the floor managing the bill. I thank her for allowing me to make these brief remarks regarding one of the nominees of President Obama—someone we will be confirming, hopefully, in the next short period of time.

I come to the floor to give my strong and unequivocal support to Alejandro Mayorkas as the Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. Before I speak about his many extraordinary qualifications for this job, let me say that it has been very disappointing and very concerning to me that so many high-level leadership positions in this particular Department have gone unfilled for so long.

It has been 6 months since Secretary Janet Napolitano stepped down, having given notice of her departure after serving with such distinction and contributing so much to the strengthening of that agency. All agencies of the Federal Government are important and there are advocacy groups who argue for them, but I think everyone understands the real significance of the Department of Homeland Security. It is a relatively new agency. The Department is only 10 years old, but it plays a key role in the security of our homeland. Because it is new, it is still struggling with how to coordinate and unite all of the internal parts and coordinate effectively with the Department of Defense.

It has new and emerging technological challenges that are extremely demanding. The cyber attack which is happening daily and which is a growing threat to us is a very important part of their mission.

May I remind Senators that immigration, border control, and border security are right in the middle of the mission of this Department. So if we want to have strong immigration policies and smart immigration policies and secure our borders with smart fences, we better get somebody who is experienced and smart to run the operation.

That is why I am here to support Alejandro Mayorkas, who has been the Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services for the last several years. He has received many compliments from both Republicans and Democrats in his role as our chief immigration officer. He has worked to secure the border and has made tremendous improvements with the resources, which have been quite significant, that we have provided to strengthen the border. He brings tremendous experience as having run one of the most significant agencies within the Department.

Today we have a chance to start filling the leadership vacuum at the Department of Homeland Security not only with visionary leaders such as Alejandro Mayorkas but with leaders who have practical hands-on experience running the important parts of this Department.

As I mentioned, the nominee is the current Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, which is really how I got to meet him and to know him and to work with him in such a close fashion.

Many of my colleagues know that I have the responsibility and privilege of informally heading up our Senate adoption caucus, and I do some international travel, helping to strengthen child welfare work around the world as well as, of course, in Louisiana and here domestically in the United States. We ran into a significant problem several years ago, which we are still trying to unwind, when Guatemala closed adoptions and our own State Department was a partner in that closure. There might have been—might have been—some good reasons for closure. The problem was that in the middle of that, there were 900 American families from every State in the Union who were caught. They were not placed on any transition list nor were they given any support—virtually no support from either our State Department or from the country of Guatemala. So some of us stepped in with partners at the State Department and others to see what we could do to help.

It has been a long, hard road for many of these parents and children who have now been stuck in orphanages, in group homes. They are no longer infants. Some of them are 8 years old and have waited 6 years for their adoption to be finalized. Some of them are 15.

Amidst all of the work the nominee had to do on immigration and so many conflicting pressures, Alejandro Mayorkas took the time to give leadership and voice and help to the powerless. That speaks a lot to me, and it should to the members of our coalition, which is very broad and completely nonpartisan, when a very important person with a lot of power steps out of that comfort zone and helps people who have no lobbyists, no power. Without his help, we would not be making the progress we are making. That is one example that proves to me he is the kind of leader we need more of, not less of, here in Washington.

I have full confidence that—based on my knowledge of his experience of running immigration and my personal knowledge of his character and his integrity and his tremendous ability in terms of diplomacy and negotiating, which I witnessed firsthand, working with many high-level government officials from outside of our own government—he has the skills to negotiate within this agency to bring everyone to a common cause, a common vision, and a common plan to move this very important Department forward.

Prior to his directorship as immigration director for the United States, he served for a good bit of time as a U.S. attorney prosecuting criminal and white-collar crime and gang violence in California. He is known very well to the two Senators from California. I think it was Senator FEINSTEIN who recommended him to that position. She has testified on his behalf and has submitted statements for the RECORD. Both Senators from California can also vouch for his almost flawless record of service.

He has already been confirmed twice by the Senate. Yet, unfortunately, there were some political concerns that are not valid that held him up. So we have moved him forward. He got a strong vote from the members of our committee who know him well and understand his high level of integrity and his proven record of service to the people of the United States.

Again, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to take a strong look at this nominee, understanding that he has been confirmed twice before. He is an outstanding, unblemished prosecutor of crime. He would be a perfect person, with his background and experience, to serve as a Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. I, frankly, think he is one of the most qualified people whom I have seen nominated.

Today, we have a chance to start filling the leadership vacuum at the Department of Homeland Security with visionary leaders. Ali Mayorkas—the current director of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services—is exactly the type of leader we need in the deputy secretary position.

Since his confirmation as head of USCIS by voice vote by the Senate in 2009, Director Mayorkas has led the effort to turn around an agency that was widely considered to be foundering and helped build a professional and competent workforce.

Director Mayorkas brings all the right qualities for this critical position; these qualities include a pushing for collaboration and efficiency within the workplace. As a prosecutor and a former U.S. attorney for California, Mr. Mayorkas demonstrated his commitment to enforcing the law to protect U.S. citizens.

As Congress and our Nation move closer to comprehensive immigration reform, we must have the proper leadership in place in the Department of Homeland Security to ensure that the laws we pass are enacted with the same transparency and accountability that he brings to his current post. I can think of no better leader to guide DHS in this pursuit, as he will do so in a way that balances the needs of our business communities and families while keeping our border safe and secure.

Mr. Mayorkas' previous experience provides a solid foundation for his future work and an extensive knowledge of our immigration system and the overall mission of the Department of Homeland Security. As the chairman of the Homeland Security Appropriations Subcommittee, I am keenly aware how important it is to have strong management at the head of this Department and believe him to be uniquely qualified for the job.

I have every confidence in his devotion to safeguarding our Nation and his ability to effectively perform his duties in this new role. I will be proudly casting my vote in support of his nomination as Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

I yield the floor. I don't see any other Senator wishing to speak at this moment, so I suggest the absence of a quorum.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 1797

Mr. REED. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 259, S. 1797, a bill to extend unemployment insurance benefits for 1 year; that the bill be read a third time and passed, and the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid upon the table with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Republican whip.

Mr. CORNYN. Reserving the right to object, Madam President, it is unfortunate that the Senate's schedule is completely full with pending cloture motions on controversial or completely nonurgent nominations. I ask if the Senator would consider amending his request to withdraw all of the pending cloture motions on executive nominations and that the Senate would proceed immediately to consideration of S. 1797, the unemployment insurance extension, and that the majority leader and the minority leader would be recognized to offer amendments in an alternating fashion so that these important issues can be considered this week. I ask the Senator to consider amending his request and reserve my right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so amend his request?

Mr. REED. Madam President, I will not amend the request. I respect the Senator's point, but I will not amend the request. I am here simply to ask for the unanimous consent as I presented it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the original request?

Mr. CORNYN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REED. Madam President, I appreciate the Senator from Texas coming here, engaging, and I appreciate the fact that he is making a point. But I am trying to make a point which I think is very compelling. Within a few days—December 28—1.3 million Americans will lose their extended Federal unemployment insurance benefits. It will be a tremendous trauma to those families, and it will be a huge impact for our economy going forward.

I have renewed my request for a full 1-year extension, and it has been objected to. I recognize that. But, I believe it is urgent we extend unemployment insurance benefits.

I also have been working closely with my Republican colleague, Senator HELLER, on a bipartisan basis to introduce a bill to extend these benefits for 3 months, giving us the opportunity to go and take a more deliberate and careful review of the program and also to provide for a mechanism to extend the benefits for a full year.

I am very pleased we are beginning to build bipartisan support for this initiative for at least 3 months. It does reflect the fact that my colleagues from all across the country are recognizing the huge impact of this loss of benefits. This is not a problem that is restricted to a particular area of the country. Nevada has the highest rate in terms of unemployment numbers. Rhode Island trails behind, but not by much. We are at over 9 percent. But you have States with high unemployment throughout the country: Michigan at 9 percent, Illinois at 8.9 percent, Kentucky at 8.4 percent, Georgia at 8.1 percent, Arizona at 8.2 percent. These are States that have significant issues with respect to unemployment and need the continuation of this program to protect their families and also to provide stimulus for their local economies.

We have at this point in many of these places two unemployed workers for every available job. So this is not just a question of: "The jobs are there. Just go get it." The job is not there. Also, we recognize—I think we all recognize—the skill sets that are increasingly in demand are some of the skill sets that mature workers—people who have been working for 20 years, who have been every day of their lives going to the office or going to the mill or going to the plant are now competing with 20-year-olds who have sophisticated information technology skills and other skills in a climate where manufacturing is becoming sophisticated. Every sort of enterprise seems to be much more sophisticated and demanding a higher level of skills than years ago. So this is a very difficult time for workers out of a job, and I believe in this difficult period of time we need to extend these benefits.

There is extensive research on unemployment insurance and the labor markets that also supports the point that people who are on unemployment insurance want to go back to work. This is a very sort of pragmatic insight. In Rhode Island, for example, the average benefit is $354 a week. For most workers, that is a fraction of what they were gaining in their job. They would love to be called back to work. They would love to find a job that fits their skills that is close to the pay they had or maybe less. But no one is getting this help and socking away a lot of money on their UI benefits.

Indeed, a recent report by the White House Council of Economic Advisers looks at the economic tradeoffs that are being faced. In their words:

In choosing the optimal unemployment insurance policy, policymakers must weigh competing costs and benefits. On the one hand, some argue that extending benefits may dull the incentives for unemployed workers to exert effort to search for another job, leading to increased unemployment—the so-called "moral hazard" effect. But on the other hand, providing benefits gives families income that can in the limit keep them from poverty but more generally can help them to finance a longer job search that might ultimately result in a job better matched with their talents, resulting in higher overall labor market productivity. . . .

These are important aspects that have to be considered. I think the consensus of many in Congress is that this program is not only necessary and essential, but it also does not significantly inhibit the willingness, the ability, the desire of people to get back to work.

Raj Chetty is a noted economist who studies these issues. He concludes:

Nearly a dozen economic studies have analyzed this question by comparing unemployment rates in states that have extended unemployment benefits with those in states that do not These studies have uniformly found that a 10-week extension in unemployment benefits raises the average amount of time people spend out of work by at most one week. This simple, unassailable finding implies that policy makers can extend unemployment benefits to provide assistance to those out of work without substantially increasing unemployment rates.

That is the conclusion of a very well respected economist who has been looking at that issue for several years.

Once again, from the Council of Economic Advisers' report:

Finally, while economists have found only small disincentive effects of UI extensions, recent research shows that the effect of UI on job search behavior is even smaller in recessions as the moral hazard effect shrinks when jobs are scarce.

Let's get back to common sense. There are roughly two workers for every job. The benefits UI beneficiaries receive are a fraction of what they would get in the workplace. They want to get back into the workplace. The jobs are just not there. Frankly, we have not done enough. I would suggest, to put those jobs in place. We have to do more. But in the interim, we have to make sure these families have some benefits and some protection.

I am quite willing to work with my colleagues if there are changes that should be made, could be made. But we are facing this deadline. Unless we move—and I am disappointed we have not moved today—1.3 million people on December 28 lose their benefits. The checks will cease going out the following week, and our economy will take a hit next year of 200,000 jobs, about a 0.2-percent growth shrinkage in GDP. We can avoid that by moving today or moving tomorrow, certainly moving as soon as we get back, to make sure these benefits are in place.

With that, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. AYOTTE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. AYOTTE. Madam President, yesterday I came to the Senate floor to discuss two amendments I had filed to the budget agreement that would have addressed an egregious part of this agreement, which is the cuts to military retiree benefits. In particular, I think the most egregious part of it is to those who have been disabled. We have all been to Walter Reed and seen and met our brave heroes, some who have lost limbs, serving our country in Afghanistan and Iraq. Yet in this agreement we are cutting their cost-of-living increases for the retirement they earned on behalf of our country.

So yesterday I came to the floor to talk about what I think is an appalling part of this budget agreement, but also to say, Why can't we amend the budget agreement and fix this now?

I offered two possibilities of how we could do that with two amendments I filed on this budget agreement. I am sure others could find in the trillions of dollars CBO has said we are going to spend over the next 10 years—$47 trillion—we can find $6 billion rather than taking it from our military retirees.

What happened yesterday on the floor was there was a motion to take down the tree so we could actually amend this budget agreement and fix provisions such as that, and it was voted down. So now we have no ability to amend this budget agreement, so I cannot bring the amendments I talked about yesterday to help our military retirees and ensure they do not get singled out in this agreement, which I think is appalling and wrong.

But I also cannot bring an amendment that I also filed that addresses an issue that is very important to the State of New Hampshire. That deals with an objection I have to a particular provision in the budget agreement that would make it easier for the Senate to pass legislation requiring online retailers to become the tax collectors for the States and the rest of the Nation—this so-called Marketplace Fairness Act that the Senate passed earlier this year.

Within this budget agreement there is what is called a reserve fund that allows the chairman of the Budget Committee to bypass certain procedural limitations that are normally allowed and procedural objections you have and all Members have to these types of legislation—budgetary objections—and these procedural objections are waived when these types of reserve funds are passed.

This provision, which I fought on the Senate floor on the Senate's budget—it did eventually get passed—is included in this agreement, even though since this body passed the Marketplace Fairness Act, the House has refused to take it up. The House has wisely found that there are major objections to this piece of legislation, which would require businesses—many of these businesses around the country that we see thriving on the Internet—to become the tax collectors for the rest of the Nation.

In fact, my State of New Hampshire does not have a sales tax. What it would require is that businesses in New Hampshire—online businesses that have written to me—it would place tremendous burdens on them. They would have to become the tax collectors for nearly 10,000 tax jurisdictions in this country, trampling on New Hampshire's choice not to have a sales tax, and also putting a tremendous burden on businesses to do the jobs of the States in becoming tax collectors for the rest of the Nation.

This legislation is bad for the economy, and I think it is bad for businesses, and particularly businesses in my home State of New Hampshire. So I object to the provision, the reserve fund, that is in this budget. I have filed an amendment that would strike that provision. But, again, no amendments are going to be heard on this budget agreement because the majority leader has filled the tree and said there will be no amendments heard, no matter the merits of the amendment, no matter how important the amendments are, including amendments I talked about that impact and help address the real egregious provision that impacts our military retirees.

This is just another example of an issue that is very important to the State of New Hampshire. Were I allowed to bring my amendment forward, I would have again expressed my opposition to this reserve fund that is within this budget, that is objectionable, that makes it easier to pass future legislation, a future version of the Marketplace Fairness Act, that will put a tremendous burden on businesses in New Hampshire. It is wrong to have online businesses become the tax collectors for the Nation.

I believe we should be allowed to amend this budget agreement, to vote on these amendments, and particularly on issues that are important to our men and women in uniform, as I have described. But not only that, this issue on the remote collection of sales taxes by online businesses throughout the country is a very important issue to the State of New Hampshire—which does not have a sales tax—but not just to the State of New Hampshire, to online businesses across the country that do not and should not have to be the tax collectors for States throughout the Nation.

With that, I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLUNT. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. BLUNT. Madam President, I wanted to talk about some solutions to our health care problems that have been out there for a while. Every time I hear someone say: There were no alternatives to the Affordable Care Act, there were no alternatives to what the President wanted to do—in fact, I heard the President say that multiple times last week, though it might have been multiple reportings of him saying it the same time. But there is no question he said it, that there were no ideas out there except his ideas.

That is just not accurate. We had and still have the best health care system in the world. But it was not perfect. It does not mean it could not have been improved. It does not mean there were not ways to create greater access. For those of us who have held concerns from the very first about the proposals we are now seeing play out in front of American families and before the American people, before individuals who thought they could get insurance but did not, before individuals who had insurance that worked who are beginning to lose it—when we see that play out and hear: Well, this was the only idea out there—not the only idea at all.

At the time I was in the House of Representatives and proposed these to the House. They were not just bills we filed and did not talk about. In fact, a lot of this was covered very widely, even on occasion we had to have Republican-only hearings because the other side did not want to talk about these issues. They just wanted to talk about one way to solve these problems that I think is more and more clear may not be solving the problems nearly as well as they would have hoped for.

There are a number of proposals that could have created more access to the good health care system we had, solved problems that individuals had. Bills that I introduced, that I was either the principal sponsor or the cosponsor of, one of those would have been to allow small businesses to band together in either what you want to call small business health plans or association health plans where people who had a common purpose could come together and figure out—actually in our State we allowed people to do it, the State of Missouri, to have those associated health plans, so your small group of 5 or 10 or 15 people did not become the universe of the group you were trying to insure, but you would have true access to small business health plans.

I will be truthful. The insurance companies, for whatever reason, never liked that idea very well. But association health plans or small business health plans were one of the things—in fact, I cosponsored that bill with Congressman SAM JOHNSON, H. Res. 2607, if anybody wants to look back and see just how much we talked about this issue and how we dealt with it.

Another issue every time the President's health care plan comes up: What about coverage for young adults? I was the only person in the House, as I recall—and I have said this a number of times and have never been challenged—who actually filed a bill that said: Let's let people stay on their family insurance policies longer.

There are those out there since who have said: That expanded that too much. It was a slacker provision. It was not anything like that. It was an effort to take the most uninsured group in America—young, healthy people—and let them stay on their parents' health care.

It was an effort to get—I think the number we talked about was around 3 million—people access to policies they did not have access to at some level. In virtually every State, you could stay on your family policy until you were 21. In Missouri, I think the number was 23. The proposal I made was let's add 2 years to that and do it for the whole country. Let's say 25.

The President said in the Affordable Care Act, 26. I do not think I would have had a big fight about whether my bill that said let's let people be insured on their family policy until they are 25—if it was expanded to 26, I do not think that makes that uniquely the President's idea. That was a bill I sponsored. It would have helped young workers, college students. These are young healthy people, generally.

It would not have added much. I think it is not adding much to insurance costs for families or those who are otherwise insured. The idea that somehow we could not do that—every time this topic comes up, there is somebody who will jump up and say: Do you mean you want to take people who are now on their family policy and who are under 26 and take them off the family policy?

All we had to do to prevent that is pass one piece of legislation that may have been 40 words long—may have been 40 words long, may have been a couple of pages long. I know of all the ideas I introduced, the biggest one was 75 pages long. It was not a 2,700-page health care bill. The biggest of all the bills I introduced was 75 pages long. We could have done one or we could have done all of them. They would have worked. Some of these are on this chart right here: encourage wellness programs, reform coverage for preexisting conditions. We had high-risk pools that were working. There was a way to expand those high-risk pools so they would work better. We proposed that in legislation.

I was on the floor the other day and talked about a young man in Missouri who is 20 now who has had an illness since he was 18 months old. He gets fluid on his brain. He had his first surgery at 18 months. He went from his family policy to the high-risk pool, which worked pretty well for him for a number of years and is working right now. But on December 31 the high-risk pool goes away. He cannot get access to the doctors he has used his entire life on any policy available to him. So we have eliminated the policy he had that was serving him well and the physicians group he had his entire life. We have eliminated that by eliminating the high-risk pool.

Is that an improvement? Absolutely not. Could the high-risk pools have been expanded? Were there ways to do that? There absolutely were. Those were proposed.

Medical liability reform was one of the things we could have done and proposed. In fact, even in the last Congress, I introduced in the Senate the Help Efficient, Accessible, Low-cost, Timely Healthcare Act, S. 1099. But that is very much like legislation that was available and could have become part of health care reform in 2009.

The safety net to be sure that emergency room physicians have particular protections on liability because they do not have any choice but to treat people, that is another bill I introduced this year that was very much in line with what we were talking about just a few years ago.

Insurance flexibility. In the 111th Congress I cosponsored H.R. 3824, the Expanded Health Insurance Options Act, which allowed people to buy across State lines through regional compacts, allowed States, if they wanted, to form compacts they could be part of that again would have been part of this solution.

Reform coverage for preexisting conditions. Encourage wellness programs. This is something that could make a big difference and is something we could have thought of ways and did think of ways to encourage. H. Res. 4038, the Common Sense Health Care Reform and Affordability Act that Representative CAMP and I introduced would have achieved this goal of looking for new and better ways to encourage wellness programs.

I am not done yet. But I will say, every time the President or anybody else steps up and says there were no other ideas, that is not true. There were other ideas that I believed then and believe now would work better. Every day, as the Affordable Care Act becomes more and more available to us, I am more and more convinced there were better solutions. I am absolutely offended by this constant discussion that there were no other ideas.

Prevent rescissions. We talked about legislation at the time that would have prevented canceling policies or prevented setting caps after somebody got sick. It does not take an entire government overwhelming the insurance marketplace to say here are two things you cannot do.

The Common Sense Health Care Reform and Accountability Act would have helped achieve that goal—prevent limits on coverage, encourage health savings accounts, encourage people to have a little of their money that is available to them to use for health care expenses. I tell you what I am seeing happen now. So many people are now looking at policies that have these huge deductibles. For most families, it is like not having a policy at all.

If someone has a policy similar to the one I was talking about on the floor the other day, reporting about a Missouri family where they were paying $1,100 a month for insurance and they had a $12,000 deductible, is that truly insurance? For most families is that truly insurance, $24,000 out of their pocket before their insurance paid anything?

But it meets all of the better coverage supposedly that the President says we now have. It met all of those standards. It could be made available. But it had deductibility—as many of these policies do. We are going to find all of this out quickly.

The only thing worse than the Web site not working may be the Web site working. Because when the Web site begins to work, people are going to have the facts. There is no reason to argue about the facts. The President continues to say people are going to have better coverage for less money. We are going to know in the next 90 days or so how true that is.

I am sure some people are going to find better coverage for less money. I am equally sure most people are not going to find that.

So health savings accounts; increased transparency—this is an idea which is actually in the bill, but they haven't pursued it, where you tell health care providers they have to give more information about what they charge and what their results are. This act passed 3½ years ago, almost 4 years ago, and it says in the law that they can require providers to do that, but nobody has passed that rule or regulation yet. This is something that would have helped.

Most of the time, you go to the hospital, particularly if it is something you have scheduled, you are in the car on the way to the hospital, and knowing who gets the better results—or who gets the same results for the lower price would be very helpful information for most Americans and most American families to have.

Reform tax treatment. This was another idea we talked about widely. If you buy your insurance on your own or you get your insurance at work, there needs to be equity in that tax treatment; whether you cap what you can get at work and allow that same tax credit if you buy it as an individual—there are lots of ways to do this.

The point is that there were lots of ideas out there. I am persuaded that these ideas right here, which would have cost taxpayers virtually nothing, would have had minimal impact on the cost of insurance but would have had a lot of impact on a bigger marketplace, more choices, not fewer choices, and would have been a better way to go.

There were ideas. At some point we may very well need to return to these ideas because at some point we may decide the course we are on is unworkable.

Americans shouldn't look at that and think we have to go back to the old system unimproved. There are plenty of ways to improve access to the best health care in the world. Diminishing that health care system is not one of those ways.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEINRICH). The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Thank you, Mr. President.

I congratulate the Senator from Missouri for his comments. Sometimes I think Republican Senators especially should begin and end every speech with an answer to the question, What would the Senator do if he were in charge? And the Senator from Missouri has said that very eloquently. It is not the first time what Republicans would do has been said on this floor. He mentioned that the law was passed 3½ years ago. We counted it one time. We mentioned 173 times on this floor the Republican step-by-step proposal for a different approach to health care in this country.

We said: Don't expect Senator MCCONNELL or any other Republican to come in with a 3,000-page Republican bill in a wheelbarrow. We don't believe in that. We believe in a different direction, a different approach. We don't believe we are wise enough in Washington to write 3,000 pages of rules to govern every aspect of our health care system in America that takes 18 or 19 percent of the economy.

We live in the iPhone age, where we want to increase the personal freedom of Americans to live longer, better, safer, and healthier. We want people to be able to do these things for themselves. We want to increase choice, competition, and in that way lower costs. If we lower costs, then more people will be able to afford to buy health insurance. That is the real way to expand health insurance in America—make it more affordable; make it so people can afford it.

So I am beginning these short remarks with a salute to the Senator from Missouri for talking about what we would do if we were in charge, and I am going to end in that way as well.

For the last couple of months, we have heard countless stories from constituents who are losing the health plans they purchased on the individual market.

According to America's Health Insurance Plans, there are 19 million Americans in the individual market. The Obama administration knew in 2010 that the rules it wrote for health plans would mean that 47 to 60 percent of those policies could not be legally offered under ObamaCare by 2014. Nevertheless, the President still said, "If you like your health insurance, you can keep it."

Now we all know that wasn't true. According to news reports collected by my staff, at least 5 million Americans, including 82,000 Tennesseans, will lose their individual plans starting January 1. That is an unwelcome Christmas present for those 82,000 Tennesseans. 16,000 Tennesseans are losing their Cover Tennessee plans; these are people who especially need help. There are also 66,000 Tennesseans who will lose their Blue Cross Blue Shield of Tennessee coverage.

I heard from a woman named Emilie, who is from Middle Tennessee. She is 39 years of age and has lupus.

She wrote:

I cannot keep my current plan because it doesn't meet the standards of coverage. This alone is a travesty. CoverTN has been a lifeline. . . . With the discontinuation of CoverTN, I am being forced to purchase a plan through the Exchange. . . . My insurance premiums alone will increase a staggering 410 percent. My out-of-pocket expense will increase by more than $6,000 a year—that includes subsidies. Please help me understand how this is "affordable."

Unfortunately, Emilie is not the only one experiencing rate shock. Millions of Americans are losing their insurance plans. They are being forced to buy new plans, many of them with higher premiums, deductibles, and coinsurance.

According to data from the Department of Health and Human Services, Tennesseans can expect to pay up to three times more on the exchanges being set up under ObamaCare for the health insurance they now have.

In 2013, a 27-year-old man in Memphis can buy a private insurance plan for as low as $41 a month. On the exchange, the lowest State average is $119 a month—a 190-percent increase.

Today, a 27-year-old woman in Nashville can buy a plan for as low as $58 a month. On the exchange, the lowest priced plan in Nashville is $114 a month—a 97-percent increase. Even with a tax subsidy, if she made $25,000 a year, the plan would be $104 a month—almost twice what she could pay today if the $58 plan was all she felt she needed.

Today, women in Nashville can choose from 30 insurance plans that cost less than the administration says insurance plans on the exchange will cost, even with the new tax subsidy.

In Nashville, 105 insurance plans offered today will not be available in the exchange.

According to HealthPocket Inc., a consumer-oriented health research firm, the average individual deductible for a bronze plan on the federally run exchange is $5,081 a year. That is 42 percent more than the average deductible of $3,500 for an individually purchased plan in 2013. According to Deloitte, that is 348 percent more than the $1,135 average deductible for an employer health plan in 2013.

These are a lot of numbers, but Americans—millions of them—are getting familiar with these numbers because this has gone from being political to very personal.

According to Avalere Health, 90 percent of bronze plans require patients to pay 40 percent of the cost of their tier 3 and 4 drugs out of their own pockets, compared with 29 percent of employer-sponsored plans that most Americans currently use. Most silver plans also require patients to pay 40 percent. For cancer patients and those with chronic illnesses, this kind of cost sharing could mean they will pay thousands of dollars out-of-pocket or go without the drugs they need to stay healthy.

Americans had to wait until the exchanges opened on October 1 to find out just how much they were going to have to pay for insurance in 2014. With such dramatic hikes in premiums and out-of-pocket expenses, it is no wonder that Americans are outraged.

Then, just before Thanksgiving, we learned that the Obama administration is delaying open enrollment for 2015 until after the midterm elections in November. The only American consumers this change will help are Democratic politicians who voted for ObamaCare because it would delay disclosure of some of the law's most insidious effects until after the election.

Senators BARRASSO, ENZI, and I introduced today the Premium Disclosure Act. We want to change the open enrollment date back to October and provide Americans notice of their premiums and cost-sharing requirements 30 days in advance so that they can plan for the future knowing their health care costs for the next year. This is a commonsense proposal that I hope my colleagues will support.

As my colleague Senator BARRASSO likes to say, what we know now about ObamaCare is just the tip of the iceberg. Much of the media attention has focused on the disastrous rollout of the Web site and the 19 million Americans in the individual market. But just below the tip of the iceberg are 160 million Americans—nearly 10 times more than have individual policies—who the Congressional Budget Office says get their insurance through the job, employer insurance.

Think about issues such as restrictive grandfathered plan rules, limits on the number of hours employees can work and be considered part time, the mandate that employers provide government-approved insurance or pay a fine, and the millions of dollars in new taxes on health plans. All of these issues will have an impact on employer-sponsored health insurance in both the public and private sector. We are already seeing that. Employers such as Sea World, Trader Joe's, The Home Depot, and other companies have publicly said they are reducing worker hours or dropping part-time employee health benefits. The chief executive officer of Ruby Tuesday, a restaurant company, told me that the cost to implement ObamaCare would be equal to the profit his company earned all of last year.

In case you think these are isolated examples, the National Association of Manufacturers says that more than three-fourths of manufacturers cited rising health care and insurance costs as the most important business challenge. The U.S. Chamber also has a membership survey saying that 74 percent of businesses are reporting that the health care law makes it harder for their firms to hire new workers. This is at a time when jobs are supposed to be the principal concern in our country.

Many of these businesses self-insure, meaning they design and pay directly for the health plans they offer their employees. According to the Kaiser Family Foundation, more than 100 million Americans currently have employer-sponsored health plans that are self-insured.

Self-insurance is a method of providing health insurance that has worked well since its inception in 1974. It needs to be preserved. Last month Senators RUBIO, RISCH, McCONNELL, and I introduced a bill to make sure the Obama administration doesn't change that, doesn't change the rule that allows the companies to insure themselves against a medical claim that could bankrupt them. Any effort by the Obama administration to change the rule on companies that self-insure will break the President's promise to millions of Americans. It won't matter if they like their employers' health plans; they won't be able to keep them.

It is not only the private sector facing fiscal challenges because of ObamaCare. Our Nation's schools, colleges, and universities are also being hit hard. There is no shortage of examples in my State of Tennessee of local leaders dealing with the burdens of ObamaCare.

The Franklin Special School District has begun limiting substitute teachers to working 4 days a week in order to avoid paying between $1 million and $4.5 million more per year in health care costs.

Maury County Schools, south of Nashville, is also limiting its substitute teachers to no more than 28 hours a week for the same reason. One school board member told the local news:

Students struggle enough having one substitute teacher, but then now we're going to have to possibly split the substitute time between two substitute teachers. It just makes it hard on the students to learn.

Wilson County Board of Education wrote to tell me that ObamaCare's reinsurance fee will cost the district an additional $165,000 in 2014 alone.

At least eight other Tennessee school districts are reportedly limiting employee work hours or entire jobs, including Clarksville, Rutherford County, Johnson City, Carter County, Washington County, Oneida Special School District, Scott County, and Stewart County.

Cumberland University in Lebanon has adopted a new policy to limit adjunct faculty to no more than three courses each term, meaning they won't be able to offer a course even if they are the most qualified instructor available.

The impact of ObamaCare on education is by no means limited to Tennessee. Investor's Business Daily has identified well over 100 school districts and institutions of higher education nationwide that have made cuts or limited employee work hours because of ObamaCare. That number is climbing daily, again suggesting this is only the tip of the iceberg.

Remember, what we are hearing about today are individual policies. What we are going to hear about next year are employer policies being cancelled, new costs, and there are 10 times as many Americans with employer policies as individual policies. Who pays the price for this? Our children. Cash-strapped schools simply don't have the money to absorb these costs, so they are forced to make difficult choices.

For these reasons—broken promises, higher costs, fewer choices—ObamaCare was an historic mistake. It expanded a health care delivery system that already costs too much and left Americans with fewer choices.

I said at the beginning of my remarks that I would like to end in the same way, and I will do that with an answer to this question: What would we do if we were in charge? What if we elected a Republican Senate and even a Republican President in 2016? We would replace ObamaCare, not by moving backward, but by moving in a different direction.

Remember, ObamaCare's real problem was it expanded a delivery system that already costs too much. What we would do instead is go step by step to introduce new ways to increase choices, to have more competition and to lower costs. We would make Medicare solvent, so seniors can depend on it. We would give Governors more flexibility with Medicaid so they can create programs with lower costs. We would repeal the ObamaCare wellness regulation—the Senator from Missouri talked about that—and replace it with one that makes it easier, not harder, for employers to give employees lower health insurance costs if they live a healthy lifestyle. We would let small businesses pool their resources and offer low-cost insurance plans for their employees. The Congressional Budget Office says that Senator ENZI's bill would allow coverage for 750,000 more Americans at a lower cost if we did that. We would allow families to purchase insurance across State lines. If there is a policy regulated by Kentucky that fits my needs, and I want to buy it, why shouldn't I be able to do it if I can afford it? We will expand health savings accounts. We would incentivize the growth of private health insurance exchanges. That is beginning to develop all across our country, giving more choices to employees. We would make it easier for patients to compare prices and quality of doctors and medical services. We would incentivize States to reform junk lawsuits. Those are the steps in the right direction where we would like to go.

When Irving Kristol died not long ago, James Q. Wilson wrote a tribute in The Wall Street Journal which struck me. He said when they began their association as neoconservatives—they were mostly Democrats—he said we were policy skeptics. He said that was mainly what our common view was. By that, I think he must have meant they did not believe Washington could, through a comprehensive piece of legislation, fix our whole health care system; that what Washington should do, particularly in this iPhone age, is to go step by step in a direction that gives more personal freedom to consumers, to Americans, so they can live longer, live healthier, live safer, and be happier.

That is what we would like to do. That is how we would like to change ObamaCare, and we would like to have that opportunity.

So unfortunately, an unwelcome Christmas present this year for 82,000 Tennesseans is that they are losing their individual policies. Even more unfortunately, an unhappy New Year is coming, in which hundreds of thousands of Tennesseans will lose their employer policies—the policies they get through their employers—because of ObamaCare. We are ready to go in a different direction and create a way for Americans to have more choices, more competition, and insurance they can purchase at a lower cost.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, first of all I want to commend my friend, the Senator from Tennessee. There is no one in this body who is more thoughtful, works harder on issues, and has shown more willingness to find common ground on a host of issues.

I also want to compliment the earlier speaker, the Senator from Missouri, who laid out a series of items that should be components of any kind of health care reform.

As somebody who is a former Governor, as is the Senator from Tennessee, I have managed a Medicaid program. As somebody who has been a private sector employer and managed private health insurance plans, I know this is a conundrum that has to be solved.

What I don't hear sometimes is folks recognizing the status quo was leading this country down a path that was unsustainable, and I look forward to working with the Senator from Tennessee, the Senator from Missouri and others to see how we can go about fixing the challenges in ObamaCare. I remember when I voted for what I called a very imperfect piece of legislation, but recognized the status quo was not a place that could be maintained.

There are a couple of points I want to make, although I am here to talk about the budget. When we talk about the very attractive components of not discriminating against folks with pre-existing conditions—and I say that as somebody who has a daughter with a major preexisting condition—and when we talk about preventive care and other items that are the “nice to have” or “we like” components, those of us who have wrestled with health care—and I started the Virginia Health Care Foundation 20 years ago—realize that when you push on one end of health care it pops out someplace else. It would be great to be able to do this in segmented parts, but I believe to get the kind of reform that was necessary you have to make a more extensive program.

As someone who stands here speaking from an IT standpoint, let us acknowledge the unprecedented disaster of the rollout of the Web site. But what I don't hear from my colleagues is that beneath all these challenges there are positive points. Look at the rise of health care costs on a macro basis, back 3 years past, when Simpson-Bowles and those of us involved in the budget—which is what I am here to talk about—were engaged in this issue. You look at the decrease in the amount of health care cost increase. If you look at the slope's decline, it is hundreds of billions of dollars of savings in the projected CBO cost of Medicare and Medicaid.

Look at one of the areas that was of enormous concern, one of the broken parts of our health care system—hospital readmission rates. Those rates have dropped dramatically.

I hear the stories of folks who are upset with the implementation of ObamaCare, but I also hear the stories of folks who have never had health care and who are finding it now at rates that are more affordable than in the past or in the past they didn't even have an option of getting health care. This is going to require fixes.

Let me comment on one of the areas most talked about—this notion of the President saying if you want to keep your health care policy, you can keep it. What this Senator has tried to do, as we move past the rhetoric into how we actually try to fix this, I have worked with our State insurance commissioner to take advantage of the opportunity for plans within the Commonwealth of Virginia to extend their coverage for at least 1 additional year, and we are starting to see some progress—not as much as I would like but some progress.

Today, with a group of my colleagues, we have written the administration to suggest that so there is not a gap in coverage, particularly for those folks above the age of 30, because of the transition, who may find themselves faced with higher costs, let's present at least a catastrophic plan under the hardship exemption and view that in a broad way. Again, this is so that folks can find, during this transition period, health care that is affordable.

As someone who believes we need to ensure the commitment of the President and others—I have stated it as well—that you can keep your health care plan, I have joined with Senator LANDRIEU for a legislative fix, if these other items don't go far enough.

As other Senators have said, there will be other issues coming up. When you are going through the reform of 17 to 18 percent of our whole economy that is connected to health care, it is going to take the willingness and good faith of people on both sides of the aisle to actually not simply relitigate the direction but to recognize how we move on from here, and I would welcome any colleagues who are willing to engage in that kind of productive dialogue, discussion, and laying out of ideas.

But this afternoon, we actually are going to be doing something that, in an otherwise fairly bleak year of accomplishments and in a Congress that may set record lows in terms of legislation passed and approval ratings, will actually end the year with something we should at least recognize as a step forward.

I remind my colleagues it was just 2 months ago we were in the midst of an unprecedented government shutdown, where millions of Americans were furloughed; where America had furloughed three Nobel prize-winning physicists who work at NASA and who were somehow deemed nonessential; where private sector folks in the tourism industry—whether in New Mexico or Virginia—were seeing a dramatic fall-off in tourism because of national parks being closed; where we were inflicting upon this economy somewhere in the neighborhood of $30 billion to $40 billion of unpredicted economic loss simply because we couldn't get a budget. But this afternoon it is my hope we will at last close that chapter. My hope is this afternoon we will vote on a budget agreement for 2 years. While it is not as grand or as comprehensive as I would have liked, it will perhaps demonstrate to the American people that although we have had to crawl before we could walk, walk before we could run, we have put forward a bipartisan compromise.

A great deal of the credit goes to Chairman MURRAY and Chairman RYAN. This agreement says for at least the balance of this fiscal year and for the next, we will take off the table the threat of another shutdown, of unprecedented furloughs. It says we will not relax our focus on deficit reduction, and we will not add to the debt, but we will actually do a little more—about $20 billion more in deficit reduction—and we will demonstrate this institution can actually put the country ahead of partisan interests.

In this compromise not everyone got what they wanted. I would have argued strongly that the big enchilada remains. How do we really take on, in a major way, that $17 trillion debt that clicks up about $4 billion a night? That would mean both political parties have to give on their sacred cows. It means we have to generate additional revenues through meaningful reform of a completely disastrous Tax Code, and yes, it means for folks on my side, we have to make sure the promise of Medicare and Social Security and other entitlement programs are here not just for this generation but for 20 and 30 years from now.

Some of those challenges will have to be put off for another day, and there are many in this body on both sides of the aisle who may have a chance to surprise some folks next year in laying out some specific ideas on how we can move to that bigger bargain. But we should not underestimate what we do today.

I have spent a longer time in business than I have in elective office, and what this country is yearning for, what consumers are yearning for, what business leaders are yearning for is just a little bit of predictability. We have seen growth rates go up higher than estimated. We have seen job growth coming quicker—as monthly revisions are made—and going up even higher than we thought. The single best thing we can do is to make sure we remove the cloud of further disruption caused by Washington. So what we do today with this small step—but a step we shouldn't underestimate—is to get rid of that threat for the next 2 years.

So I look forward to supporting this bipartisan agreement. As I mentioned, it rolls back the most draconian parts of sequestration. Sequestration was set up to be the most stupid option so that no rational group of people would ever agree to it. I call it stupidity on steroids. So this budget agreement gets rid of the worst brunt of that sequestration and then gives this body and our colleagues in the House the ability to actually fashion a budget for 2 years that will also allow them to allocate within these still historically lower numbers.

So I will vote for this compromise, but as with any compromise, there are particular provisions of this compromise I would not have agreed to and that I do not support. One of those provisions is a component that unfairly singles out our military families. Our military families over the last decades—plus have fought two wars. They have made unprecedented sacrifices. Often they have been the only Americans making sacrifices through many of the years in the last decades.

Virginia is home to the Nation's largest concentration of Active-Duty and retired military personnel, and I consider it an honor to represent them here in Congress. The component of the budget compromise that singles out these military retirees for a decrease in their cost-of-living increase was not an appropriate component. But rather than saying let's flush the whole deal down, I will vote for this deal, with the idea in mind—similar to my approach to the health care bill—that we will attack this problem and fix it, and I have a fix I will propose to replace this component going forward.

I have been joined in this effort by my friend from Virginia, Senator Kaine, and former Governor Senator Shaheen, to introduce legislation which would eliminate this close to $6 billion hit on our military retirees. Our legislation doesn't add to the debt or deficit but would replace this unfair hit to our military retirees by closing certain corporate tax loopholes, which would generate sufficient revenue to make sure our military families would not be unfairly affected.

I know in a grander bargain all things may be on the table, but in this smaller deal we should not be singling out our military families and those retirees for this undue burden.

I believe and I hope other colleagues on both sides of the aisle, as we get this budget compromise passed, will join in this effort to substitute out this $6 billion provision for what I believe would be a much more readily acceptable $6 billion provision in terms of change in the corporate tax law. I know the chairman of the Budget Committee from our side of the aisle would welcome this kind of substitution. Her job was to get a deal and she did that job, she got a deal, and I look forward to supporting her.

I will close with these comments. Virginians have served with honor in our military for generations. I assure our service men and women that because of this provision—which doesn't take effect until 2016—we have ample time to make this substitution.

We are being joined on the floor by Senator Shaheen, the original sponsor of this legislation, and I remain committed to working with Senator Shaheen, Senator McCain, and any Member of this body from either party, to work on this deficit reduction package, this substitution, which would relieve this burden.

I hope later this afternoon we can build on the overwhelming support this compromise budget measure received in the House, and believe a strong bipartisan vote today—actually, yesterday, when we cleared cloture—is an indication it will hopefully get the same kind of vote today.

Regardless, I believe we will pass this budget compromise and we will show this body can work, and American families can go into the holiday season without the potential threat of another government shutdown hitting them mid-January.

I again thank the chairman of our Budget Committee for the enormous amount of time she put into this effort. She had lots of folks pushing and pulling her from every direction. As someone who still aspires to be part of a grander bargain and a bigger deal, our day will come again; but in the meantime, later this afternoon we will do the people's work and make sure we do our most essential requirement, which is to present a budget which is fiscally responsible, takes down our deficit, and allows our government to move forward and our economy to grow.

I yield the floor.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise to speak on the bipartisan, bicameral budget agreement that is currently before the Senate.

This budget agreement, while far from perfect, will help move our economy forward, create certainty that has been sorely lacking for far too long, and save some $23 billion over the next decade. It has been 4 years since the House and Senate have reached an agreement on a budget that sets priorities for Federal spending and revenues. While the 2-year budget agreement worked out between Senator Murray and Congressman Ryan is not what I would have written, it is a step in the right direction. It will prevent Congress from lurching from crisis to crisis, avoid most of the across-the-board, meat-ax cuts known as sequestration, and will allow the Appropriations Committee, of which I am a member, to do its job of developing bills to responsibly fund the government within agreed to limits.

Over the last 9 months since sequestration went into effect, I have met with countless Mainers, including shipyard workers, medical researchers, educators, Border Patrol agents, small business owners affected by the delayed opening and shutdown of Acadia National Park, and nonprofit organizations providing services for the low-income and the elderly. All have shared stories of their personal experiences with how the indiscriminate cuts of sequestration have affected them, their families, and those whom they serve. The sequester has had a detrimental impact on Mainers and our country and is not the right approach to reducing our enormous debt. The $65 billion in sequestration relief provided by this agreement will help mitigate the effect on our economy moving forward and allow Congress to prioritize those programs that are most effective over those that are wasteful, duplicative, or simply no longer necessary.

The agreement will spare the Department of Defense some of the devastating sequestration cuts that Pentagon officials testified could cripple military readiness, harm our national security, and affect thousands of defense-related jobs that are vital to our economy in Maine and in the United States. It also begins to address the harmful impact of indiscriminate cuts made to vital programs such as transportation, education, and biomedical research.

It is critical that Congress continue to work to bring spending under control. Our national debt now stands at an almost incomprehensible $17.2 trillion. This sum, along with rising interest payments, is our legacy to future generations and simply must be responsibly addressed. This agreement will save $23 billion over the next 10 years and help prevent government shutdowns over the next 2 years.

I am, however, deeply disappointed that this agreement includes a reduction in the annual cost of living increase for some current military retirees. We must honor the service and sacrifice of the brave men and women who served our country so that they can continue to have access to the benefits they worked so hard to earn and that were promised to them. The significant changes to military retirement included in this budget single out current retirees and change the rules for them, and that is not fair.

In 2012, I was a member of the Armed Services Committee when we created the Military Retirement and Compensation Modernization Commission with the precise purpose of comprehensively examining this issue in a thorough way that protects current retirees and ensures that the military retirement system is offering the right incentives to recruit and retain the most qualified and experienced servicemembers at a time of budget constraints.

I have raised my concerns with my colleagues about the military retirement provisions in this agreement and will work to ensure that this issue is addressed before it is set to take effect in January 2016. The chairman of the Armed Services Committee has already committed to reviewing this change at the start of next year. I intend to do everything I can, in conjunction with the leadership of the Armed Services Committee, to identify a more reasonable approach to this problem that would provide the same level of savings while protecting current retirees.

The American people are weary of watching a Congress that can't work. We saw the result of this dysfunction when the government shutdown in October. That is why I worked so hard to forge a compromise that helped get Congress functioning again. We simply must avoid another shutdown and put our Nation back on a sound financial footing. In my judgment, this agreement takes the first steps on a responsible path forward.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I would like to join several of my colleagues who have already spoken to clarify the intent of an important provision in the Bipartisan Budget Act that the Senate is currently considering.

Section 203 of the legislation is intended to prevent criminals from using information in the Death Master File, DMF—a list of recently deceased individuals that includes personal information such as Social Security numbers—to steal their identities to commit fraud.

At the same time, the provision is intended to allow those who must use the DMF for legitimate business or official purposes, such as paying life insurance proceeds, preventing fraud, and addressing unclaimed property, to continue to have access to the information they need.

Under this provision, the Secretary of Commerce is required to establish a program that will restrict public access to an individual's personal information on the DMF for a 3-year period after his or her death. The Secretary will also determine individuals certified under the program who will maintain access to the Death Master File for legitimate business or fraud prevention interests. These include State authorities, life insurance companies, and other legitimate users.

To strike this balance between stopping criminals and allowing legitimate users to perform their responsibilities, the provision intends for the Department of Commerce to follow rule-making procedures allowing for sufficient notice and comment from the public and interested parties. The provision is also intended to allow legitimate current users of the Death Master File to continue accessing DMF information until the certification program is established.

I understand that Senator NELSON, the original author of this provision, engaged in a colloquy with Chairman MURRAY and Senator CASEY, clarifying its intent. I salute Senator NELSON for his leadership in crafting a strong and well-targeted response to the important issue of identity theft.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, in comparison to recent battles this Congress has fought over the budget, the legislation we consider today represents progress. Instead of government by crisis and hostage-taking, we have before us an agreement negotiated by the Senator MURRAY, a Democrat, and Congressman RYAN, a Republican, a negotiation in which neither side got all that it wanted, but both sides found acceptable middle ground. That is not a common event around here these days. Significantly, by reaching agreement, they have offered us a way to avoid a potential government shutdown in 2014. And they have provided a way to offer some relief from the damaging impact of sequestration.

So I will support this agreement. But I will not do so without reservation. Despite what it offers, this budget agreement falls short of what I believe we need to accomplish in three significant ways.

First, while the agreement provides some modest relief, it leaves more than half of the irrational meat-ax cuts of sequestration in place over 2 years. As a result, important programs to protect and promote national security, public safety, health, transportation, education, and the environment will remain under-funded. A balanced package that included measures I have recommended to close loopholes that allow profitable corporations to avoid taxes by sending their revenue and assets to offshore tax havens would, if passed, do far more to address these problems.

Second, this agreement does not include an extension of emergency unemployment benefits for 1.3 million people. Those benefits end in less than 2 weeks. Failure to extend these benefits would mean more than 43,000 workers in my state of Michigan would lose unemployment benefits at year's end. In the first 6 months of 2014, more than 86,000 additional Michigan workers would also lose benefits if we fail to act. This is both cruel and economically self-defeating. At a time when job creation remains slower than any of us want, and when nationwide there are roughly three job seekers for every available job opening, removing the safety net that keeps families from falling into despair is unjust. And the reduced economic activity that will result will cost thousands of jobs, making our economic recovery even slower. The Republican refusal to include extended unemployment benefits in this legislation is deeply disappointing. Majority Leader REID has expressed determination to take up an unemployment benefit extension bill in January. It is essential that we do so.

Third, the agreement includes a provision that would reduce cost-of-living adjustments for working-age military retirees. This is a troubling provision because it singles out a group of veterans, and therefore I have decided the Senate Armed Services Committee will review the retirement benefit changes next year, before they take effect in 2015. This proposal is yet more evidence of the fact that the only fair solution to the sequestration problem is a balanced, comprehensive deficit-reduction agreement. The major impediment to such an agreement has been the inability of some in Congress to accept the necessity of real additional revenue, such as closing tax loopholes used by highly profitable corporations to avoid paying taxes by transferring assets and revenue to subsidiaries in offshore tax havens.

These shortcomings in the budget legislation before us are significant, but nonetheless this legislation does offer important benefits. The sequestration relief, though smaller than many of us would like, is significant. Over the course of the last year, the Armed Services Committee has repeatedly heard from our senior military and civilian defense leaders that the rigidity and extent of the sequestration puts the security of our Nation and the lives of our troops at risk. Sequestration has also shut Head Start classrooms, labs researching cures to life-threatening diseases, and clinics providing health care to the needy and elderly, among many unwise effects.

Again, this legislation offers the only available way out of the cycle of crisis that brought us a damaging government shutdown in November. That shutdown was extraordinarily disturbing to every American who expects Government to operate without the constant threat of shutting down.

So on balance I support this legislation because of the modest positive changes it makes from the status quo, and in the hope that this is the first step toward a more comprehensive and more balanced deficit-reduction agreement to replace the rest of sequestration. This agreement likely represents as much progress as we realistically can make in the absence of a balanced, comprehensive budget agreement. Again, the major stumbling block that prevents us from reaching such an agreement is the reluctance of so many Republicans to consider additional revenue, particularly the substantial revenue available to us through closing unjustified tax loopholes. It is essential that we spend the coming weeks and months working toward a better, more balanced, fairer, more comprehensive solution.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. President, I support the Murray-Ryan budget agreement, even though I disagree with a number of provisions included in the bill, because it includes balanced savings to roll back sequestration for the next 2 years and help restore much needed certainty to government agencies and our economy.

Sequestration is just a fancy word for cuts—mindless cuts. I strongly believe we must end the mindless, across the board cuts from sequestration which have significantly reduced funding for a number of Federal programs that are critical to Massachusetts families and businesses.

Sequestration has also significantly cut Federal spending on the research which has been critical for the development of the Massachusetts economy and will damage our economy in the long-term.

Under the Murray-Ryan agreement, sequestration under the Budget Control Act would continue. However, the size of sequestration will be rolled back and the Appropriations Committee will have the authority to make changes to existing spending rather than be required to impose an across the board cut. The agreement would set overall discretionary spending for this year at $1.012 trillion—which is about $46 billion less than the Senate budget level and $45 billion above the level set in the Budget Control Act. Spending would increase only slightly next year. Unfortunately, this legislation does not eliminate sequestration from future years, in fact the agreement extends sequestration for 2 additional years (fiscal years 2022–2023).

The agreement includes dozens of specific deficit-reduction provisions, with mandatory savings and non-tax revenue totaling approximately $85 billion. Those provisions include higher security fees for airline passengers, reduced contributions to Federal pensions, higher premiums for Federal insurance for private pensions, and savings from not completely refilling the strategic petroleum reserve.

Finally, the agreement would reduce the deficit by between $20 and $23 billion. It also includes a 3 month extension of the Medicare Sustainable Growth Rate, SGR.

It is unfortunate that this agreement fails to include a critical extension of unemployment insurance, which is a critical component of our ongoing recovery and a lifeline to millions of Americans seeking employment. As a result of objections raised by the minority in the Senate, unemployment insurance will terminate just a few days after the holiday season ends. This action will cut off support desperately needed by more than 1.3 million Americans including more than 30,000 in Massachusetts. The U.S. Department of Labor has found that for every $1 of unemployment benefits spent, $2 of economic activity are generated. Extending unemployment benefits would increase our Gross National Product by 0.2 percent and create more than 200,000 jobs in 2014 alone. These Americans need our help and deserve our best efforts to resolve this issue before we adjourn for the year.

Before the Senate adjourns for the year, I hope that the Senate can act on the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Extension Act which would reinstate and continue Federal support for unemployment insurance (UI), effective January 1, 2014, for an additional 3 months to temporarily prevent the expiration of benefits for 1.3 million Americans. I am a cosponsor of this legislation because it would allow all States to continue Federal unemployment insurance without a lapse from January 1, 2014. The bill would also allow any State whose agreement was previously terminated in 2013 to enter into a new agreement with the Department of Labor for emergency unemployment compensation.

I have heard from a number of veterans from Massachusetts who have expressed their deep concerns about a provision in the budget agreement that would reduce the annual cost of living increase for military retirees under the age of 62. I am concerned that this provision could have a serious financial impact on these patriots and their families who fought to protect our freedom. The retirement compensation of servicemembers and Federal employees should never be reduced to lower our deficit especially while corporate tax loopholes and billions in subsidies for oil companies remain on the books.

I am proud to cosponsor the Military Retirement Restoration Act. The bill would replace the cuts to military retiree benefits from the Murray-Ryan Budget Agreement by preventing companies from avoiding U.S. taxes by abusing tax havens. I am hopeful that the Senate will be able to consider this legislation early next year. I also strongly support the review of this provision by Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman LEVIN before it takes effect in December 2015. Finally, I await a comprehensive review of the military retirement and compensation systems being conducted by the Military Retirement and Compensation Modernization Commission established by Congress which can provide a better solution than the one included in the budget agreement for military retirees.

I would also like to speak about another provision of the Bipartisan Budget Act: section 203, which limits access to the Social Security Administration's Death Master File, DMF. The DMF is a little-known but critically important piece of our Social Security system. It is the authoritative index of all deaths reported to the Social Security Administration from 1936 to the present, an index that contains over 85 million records of death. The DMF is therefore the prime tool available to formally confirm the death of an American citizen, and a variety of enterprises, from life insurers to pension funds, rely on the DMF to administer benefits and premiums.

Under section 203 of the Bipartisan Budget Act, access to the DMF will be greatly restricted. From now on, the Department of Commerce will not be allowed to disclose information in the DMF with respect to a newly deceased person for 3 years except to persons certified under a new program managed by the Commerce Department. Under this new program, which has yet to be established, certification will be given only to those persons who have either a legitimate business or fraud prevention interest and have processes in place to safeguard the information. The goal of section 203 is laudable—to prevent persons from using the DMF to engage in identity theft and fraud. Given the sensitive nature of this information, it is good that steps are being taken to prevent the misuse of this data.

Yet, while I support the goal of this section, I am concerned about how it will be implemented. Many insurance companies and pension administrators rely on the DMF to determine when benefits should be paid to their beneficiaries. In fact, nine States actually require that insurers access the DMF prior to the payment of benefits. These companies' access to the DMF is critical to their efforts to serve consumers, and their access cannot be interrupted while the Department of Commerce creates its new access certification program. Similarly, State Treasurers and Comptrollers, and their authorized personnel, also use the DMF for important purposes and need continued access while the regulations are being developed by the Secretary of Commerce.

I therefore urge the Department of Commerce to take immediate regulatory action to ensure that insurance companies, pension plans, and State Treasurers and Comptrollers' access to the DMF is not inhibited during the initiation of the certification program and that all parties have an opportunity to obtain certification prior to losing access to the DMF. The Department of Commerce should also ensure that stakeholders, both in the industry and in the beneficiary communities, have an opportunity to provide input on any rulemakings regarding either the certification program or the access restrictions themselves.

Earlier this year, I released a report that outlined the damage to our economy caused by sequestration and proposed an alternative plan that would produce the $1.2 trillion savings called for in the Budget Control Act without imposing the mindless, across-the-board sequestration cuts.

I strongly believe we can work together on a bipartisan effort to replace these misguided cuts of sequestration with a balanced deficit reduction plan that includes a more progressive tax code, targeted cuts to defense spending and nuclear weapons, an end to unnecessary oil subsidies, and the expansion of innovative programs in Medicare that improve the quality of healthcare for beneficiaries.

At the same time, we must make smart investments now that will create jobs and continue our country's economic recovery. We can no longer afford to make irresponsible across-the-board cuts that hurt middle class families and hurt our still-fragile economy.

Our national strategy for job growth must continue to emphasize the areas in which Massachusetts excels: an emphasis on education; investment in our high-tech, medical, and clean energy industries; and strong support for the teachers, firefighters, and police that form the backbone of our communities. This approach has resulted in the Bay State consistently having an unemployment rate that is significantly lower than the rest of the Nation.

I want to work in a bipartisan effort to fix our fiscal problems and I believe working together we can reach a bipartisan agreement to fix sequestration and maintain our fiscal discipline.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, I join my colleague from Connecticut to address a specific provision in the Bipartisan Budget Act. Overall, while this deal is flawed, we are heartened to see both sides coming together to put in place a workable fiscal foundation for the next 2 years. But we want to make sure to clarify what we are intending to do with a particular provision in this bill. Specifically, section 203 of the act institutes new reforms to the Social Security Death Master File, which keeps an authoritative record of deaths in this country. These important reforms include a new certification process that will ensure only those properly authorized and able to maintain the information under significant safeguards can access the information on this master file on a current basis, helping prevent identity theft and other abuses. Release of the information to all others would be delayed by 3 years after an individual's death. We would like to emphasize, though, that this provision was not intended to interrupt in any way the legitimate use of the Death Master File in the interim. I will turn to my colleague to explain why we think this is so important and how we think we can avoid this situation.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank my good friend, the senior Senator from Connecticut. Our understanding is that many States require insurers to check their policies against the master list on an ongoing basis in order to ensure they have accurate information about deceased individuals whom they insure. Furthermore, State treasurers, State comptrollers, and credit bureaus all use the Death Master File for important purposes and need continued access. We certainly do not want to halt these processes or stand in the way of compliance with State law. As such, I am pleased to join you in urging the Social Security Administration and the Commerce Department to both work closely with key stakeholders during the transition period and to use the flexibility we believe they already possess to ensure uninterrupted legitimate access to the Death Master File. State governments, too, should be flexible throughout this transition as insurers under their jurisdictions seek to comply with these new Federal provisions.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. I echo my colleague's recommendations. Overall, so long as we manage the transition appropriately, my friend and fellow Senator from Connecticut and I believe the new system will save hundreds of millions of dollars and also protect the identities of millions of Americans.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I will vote in favor of the bipartisan budget compromise put forward by Senator MURRAY and Congressman RYAN.

I understand some of my colleagues are not happy with this budget deal. If any of them had been able to show me a better alternative that had the votes to pass in both the House and the Senate and prevent a government shutdown next month, then I would vote no on the measure before the Senate. Unfortunately, we did not have a better plan.

I share the concerns that many of my colleagues have with the provision that slows the growth of working-aged military retirees. This provision will not take effect until the end of 2015. I am confident that, before then, under the leadership of the chairman and ranking member of the Armed Services Committee, we will overturn this unfair provision.

My support for this budget deal centers primarily on two very important facts. First, this agreement will prevent another government shutdown; we cannot put the American people and the people in my State of Arizona through another government shutdown. And, second, the budget deal will go a long way in alleviating the devastating impact of sequestration on our military.

It is imperative that we do what is necessary to avoid sequestration if we are to expect our military to properly defend this Nation and provide for our national security. Defense Secretary Hagel has stated his support for this budget agreement, as have GEN Martin Dempsey, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Christine Fox, Acting Deputy Secretary of Defense, GEN Ray Odierno, Chief of Staff of the Army, and GEN Mark Welsh, Chief of Staff of the Air Force.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, in what I hope is a sign of things to come, today, I expect the Senate to pass the Bipartisan Budget Act. The result of the long-awaited budget conference—one that had long been requested by Chairwoman MURRAY but never agreed to by Senate Republicans—the agreement has found some common ground and reflects a shared commitment to work for the American people—something in short supply in Congress these days.

The budget deal we are considering today is a true compromise. I believe it would be difficult to find any Member of Congress who fully embraces every aspect of this agreement. In spite of that, there is broad, bipartisan support for the bill, as evidenced by the overwhelming bipartisan vote in the House late last week and the bipartisan vote by which cloture was invoked here in the Senate. There is bipartisan support for the overall goal of ending this manufactured budget stalemate that we currently face.

The Bipartisan Budget Act will provide us with the our top-line spending levels for the remainder of this fiscal year and next and, most importantly, will prevent the full force of a second round of sequestration's indiscriminate and devastating cuts. This is welcome news for nearly every American who has seen how devastating the sequester has been for their communities and for those who have anxiously awaited a second round of deeper, more painful cuts. With agencies facing budgets that just simply could not meet their basic obligations to the public and to the Nation's priorities and with their coffers to insulate programs and prevent furloughs and layoffs exhausted, allowing the sequester to lengthen and deepen truly would have been debilitating and would have stunted our ongoing economic recovery.

While this is not the budget I would have written and while it is paid for in a number of ways with which I simply disagree, we are at a juncture at which we cannot allow the goal of perfection to bring on another body blow to the Nation and to our economy. One thing I have heard clearly from Vermonters is that we must replace the sequester. While not perfect, this deal will in fact save jobs, reduce unnecessary furloughs, and will not prioritize defense spending at the cost of our education and housing programs as so many other budget proposals have in the past.

I was proud to support a Senate budget and Senate appropriations bills that would fully replace sequestration by closing corporate tax loopholes and making responsible cuts. I am disappointed that this deal does not more closely follow the framework or provide the funding levels supported earlier by the Senate. As a senior member of the Appropriations Committee, I welcome the fact that this deal will mean that we will be able to get back to the work of passing annual appropriations bills through regular order, ending the practice of putting these budget decisions on autopilot through continuing resolutions. The annual appropriations process provides us with the opportunity to make much needed adjustments to agency priorities and budgets. This budget also allows a return to regular order while keeping the promises we have made to seniors. It protects Social Security and Medicare benefits from the harmful cuts included in the earlier Ryan Budget.

But there certainly are areas in which this deal is lacking. I had hoped any budget agreement we considered would include an extension of unemployment insurance that will end later this month for 1.3 million Americans. It is disappointing that it does not. Unemployment insurance is a vital component of our ongoing recovery and a lifeline to millions of Americans as they search for work in this challenging economy.

I hope the bipartisan spirit that is the basis of this agreement can continue into the new year, and I hope that when the Senate, early in the new year, considers legislation to restore this lifeline of unemployment insurance, Senators and Representatives will support an extension.

Unfortunately, my disappointment is not reserved only for what was not included in the deal but also for ways this budget pays to replace sequestration.

A provision included in this agreement could negatively impact not-for-profit student loan servicers around the country by removing $3.1 billion in mandatory funding and the requirement that the Department of Education work with these organizations service direct Federal loans. The non-profit Vermont Student Assistance Corporation, VSAC, has been servicing Federal loans and chalking up high borrower satisfaction rate while doing this work. I appreciate Chairwoman MURRAY's clarification that this provision is not aimed at ending existing contracts like VSAC's, but I am concerned that the funding used to service these loans will now need to be found elsewhere. Our discretionary budget is stretched thin as it is, and this provision will arrive on the doorstep of an already overburdened Education Department.

Even though we have reduced the deficit by $2.4 trillion since the start of fiscal year 2011, with nearly three-quarters of that deficit reduction coming from $1.8 trillion in spending, there is ongoing pressure to find additional ways to put money toward deficit reduction. It concerns me that this budget proposal will devote $23 billion toward deficit reduction—barely a drop in the bucket of the larger picture—by forcing those who have served in our military, future Federal employees, and airline passengers—but not the airlines—to pay for it.

Under this proposal, many Active-Duty military retirees are targeted for Federal spending cuts by a reduction to their cost-of-living adjustment until they reach age 62. This is a bait-and-switch maneuver that will cost them thousands of dollars in compensation that they were promised and have earned—many of them while bravely serving in Iraq and Afghanistan. That just doesn't sit right with me. This provision, which saves only $6 billion, is set to be phased in over several years until full implementation in 2017. Unfortunately, these pension reforms will not be grandfathered in for military retirees, as will be done for Federal employees—the only positive component of the measure addressing Federal worker pensions in this legislation. It is my hope that the delay of its application will give Congress the time to responsibly replace the savings from these changes to military retiree compensation.

I am disappointed that the only deal that could receive bipartisan support does not ask oil companies to sacrifice their tax breaks but instead asks for sacrifices from our military retirees and hard-working Federal workforce. And instead of closing tax loopholes benefiting private jet owners and companies hiding profits overseas, we are forced to find savings through cuts to our conservation programs.

I have always believed that getting our fiscal house in order must go hand in hand with policies that promote economic growth, create jobs, and strengthen the middle class. Without this deal, sequestration would bring to a halt economic growth and threaten to undo the progress we have made. Further sequestration undoubtedly would increase furloughs and eliminate jobs. Sequestration would devastate housing programs keeping roofs over families this winter and gut programs supporting the education of our children, lifesaving technology for law enforcers, and services for crime victims. Sequestration is a blunt, harmful, and mindless instrument. The Bipartisan Budget Act, while not perfect, is the lifeline we need to prevent that bleak sequestration future from becoming a reality.

It is time for us to move beyond these manufactured budget crises and focus on the many remaining challenges that matter most to the American people.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the final 20 minutes before the cloture vote be equally divided, and that I control the final 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, this afternoon we will vote to pass a budget for the next 2 years. That sounds really good when we think about actually getting a budget for the next 2 years. I support this budget because I think it provides the certainty our businesses and our economy need and that our families need. It replaces some of the reckless across-the-board cuts known as sequestration, and ensures—perhaps most importantly—that we won't have another government shutdown.

The alternative—allowing this budget to fail and setting up another government shutdown—is simply unacceptable. We saw the impact the government shutdown had on our economy, on the people who depend on vital services, as well as on our national defense and our military readiness.

So while this budget is not perfect—it is not something I would have written; I am sure it is not something Senator MURRAY would have written. But the budget deal struck by Senator MURRAY, the chairman of the Budget Committee in the Senate, and Congressman PAUL RYAN, the chairman of the Budget Committee in the House, is a product of bipartisan compromise—something we need a whole lot more of in Washington these days. It represents a small but important step forward for our government and for our economy.

While the budget we are going to vote on today is not perfect, I do believe it is a step forward. It doesn't close a single corporate loophole. It doesn't extend unemployment insurance, which I would like to have seen for people who have lost their jobs through no fault of their own. That is probably going to cost our economy about 200,000 jobs. And there are provisions included in the bill that I think are misguided and need to be fixed. But the fact is, this is a step forward also in addressing sequestration in a way I think is absolutely critical to anybody who does business with the Federal Government or with companies and families who are dependent on services and on contracts with the Federal Government.

I was at BAE Systems in Nashua, NH, on Monday. I heard from the employees there through their leadership how important it was to have a budget for 2 years to provide some certainty for the company so that they knew what programs they were working on—they do defense contracting—and they could count on, that would provide certainty for them, which is very important. Because one of the comments we have heard on the defense side of the budget is that the cuts from sequestration were having a very detrimental impact on the readiness of our military, on our men and women who are serving, and on the men and women who work for the Department of Defense.

We have seen it in New Hampshire at the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard where we saw furloughs of people at the shipyard. We saw the impact the uncertainty as a result of sequestration was having and has been having on the ability to know what they are going to be working on, and to be assured the work will be there in the future. We have seen it with our National Guard in New Hampshire, where the training they need to have to keep people current is being affected, where people were furloughed as a result of those sequestration cuts. This is legislation which will address that in a way that is critical to our national security and critical to the men and women who serve in our military.

There are provisions in the bill I think need to be fixed. I am very concerned, as so many other people in this body are, with the impact of the bill on military retirees. I am disappointed that Congressman RYAN was so committed to including this provision in the compromise bill. But one of the things I want to speak to this afternoon is an effort I am working on with a number of my colleagues here in the Senate to try and fix that provision—to try and address the negative impacts the bill might have on military retirees' benefits, because what the bill does is include an unnecessary reduction in benefits for military retirees under the age of 62. I think there are lots of other ways we can find budgetary savings rather than cutting those retirement benefits for the men and women who have served our Nation in uniform.

The good news is that this provision does not go into effect for another 2 years, so we have time to fix this. We have already heard from the chairman of the Armed Services Committee that he is interested in trying to address this provision as we take up the Defense authorization bill in the coming year, but I am ready to get to work right now to address the provision.

Yesterday I introduced legislation, the Military Retirement Restoration Act, with 15 of my colleagues which would replace the military retiree benefit cuts by closing a tax loophole some corporations are using to avoid paying their fair share of taxes. These corporations set up shell companies in tax havens to avoid being considered an American company even though they are controlled and operated on American soil. I think most Americans would agree this kind of tax avoidance is unfair and that we should close this tax loophole rather than reducing military retiree benefits. This is just one idea. I am certainly open to other solutions. I hope we can continue the bipartisan work that began with Senator MURRAY and Congressman RYAN and that we saw again in the vote to end the filibuster on this bill—that we can continue to work in a bipartisan way to replace the cuts for military retirees' benefits and we can do it in a way that is smart, but that we can move forward to end the uncertainty, to get a budget in place for 2 years, and to make sure we address the devastating sequestration impacts we have seen since March, the automatic cuts and the impact they are having on the domestic side of the budget and on the defense side.

I see Senator MCCAIN on the floor. I know earlier on the floor he talked about hearing from every single uniformed service leader of the four armed services, including the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, about the impact and further effects that sequestration would have on our national security. That is testimony itself of the need to move forward to get this budget deal done, and to come back and revisit the concerns we have about other provisions.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. MCCAIN pertaining to the introduction of S. 1851 are printed in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. COONS). The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. President, I rise today and associate myself with the remarks of my colleague Senator SHAHEEN that she delivered earlier today. She is a fierce supporter of our men and women in uniform, both when they serve our Nation and when they retire or leave the military. I am an original cosponsor of her Military Retirement Restoration Act, and I am also supportive of passing a bipartisan budget deal that prevents our government from shutting down and prevents our defense budget from being slashed.

The American people have made it crystal clear that they are tired of gridlock here in Washington, they are tired of partisan bickering, they are tired of the fact that it has led us to sequestration and the kind of crisis budgeting that has prevented us from getting our fiscal house in order.

Like every one of us, I do not support every provision in the bipartisan budget agreement, but I want to give great credit to Senator MURRAY and Congressman RYAN for their willingness to sit down together and negotiate in good faith and come up with a deal that moves our country forward. Let me make it clear that the budget compromise is not perfect, but it is far better than the alternative. Let's be clear what the alternative is: A $20 billion sequester cut for the Department of Defense on January 15 and a much higher likelihood of a government shutdown. Our country simply cannot afford more ideological standoffs that lead nowhere. Our men and women in uniform and our national security cannot afford to see those catastrophic cuts.

Like many of my colleagues, I believe we should find an alternative to the decreases in the cost-of-living adjustments for working age military retirees. That is why I am proud to cosponsor Senator SHAHEEN's legislation which would do just that. I am committed to work with Senator LEVIN and my other colleagues on the Armed Services Committee to continue to find additional ways to protect the retirement that our retirees and their families have earned. These proposed changes do not go into effect until 2015 and that gives us some room and some time to get together to work on addressing these areas where this bipartisan budget agreement falls short.

This is an important agreement. It is important to the Defense Department and to other programs like Head Start and Meals On Wheels that affect Coloradans every day. It will mean more resources for housing and economic development programs, for roads, small airports, and transit systems, for first responders and those who fight wildfires. The list goes on. This agreement provides predictability for the individuals and organizations, cities and businesses in Colorado that need to know what to expect from the Federal Government.

It does all of this while providing for a net reduction in the deficit, something we all know must be achieved more often. For all those reasons I support the partisan budget package and urge my colleagues to join me and continue to find ways to keep faith with our military retirees and their families. If you think about what we are doing with the bipartisan budget agreement, we are creating more certainty for our economy.

PRODUCTION TAX CREDIT

Mr. President, I want to take a few additional minutes to talk about a driving force in our economy that is creating good-paying American jobs, and that is our manufacturing sector.

The manufacturing sector right now supports about 17 million jobs in the United States. Those jobs are the backbone of a strong, thriving middle class, and they prove that it is still possible to make it in America. In Colorado, our manufacturers literally have the wind at their backs. I say that because our wind energy industry is not only a critical part of Colorado's manufacturing sector, but it is also an essential component of our made-in-America strategy for energy independence. That is why I am proud to have successfully fought to ensure that the manufacturers who power our wind energy industry have the policies they need to create jobs and thrive.

These policies support American workers, and they ensure that we are giving a leg up to all sources of American-grown energy. I have been proud to lead these efforts here in the Congress, including when I delivered 27 speeches on the Senate floor last year that culminated in the extension of the Production Tax Credit for wind.

Wind energy, which is enabled by the PTC, supports thousands of manufacturing jobs across this country, and that is because building a wind turbine takes a heck of a lot of work, involving everyone from steelworkers to electricians to computer engineers. These are good-paying middle-class jobs that help grow our economy from the middle out. These are jobs that are not only not being offshored, they cannot be offshored. They are staying here, in Colorado and across our great Nation.

To prove that point, just look at this map of wind manufacturing facilities across the United States. There are more than 550 manufacturing facilities in every region of the country, spread across 44 States involved in the wind industry.

I am making sure the Presiding Officer's state is represented and I think it is—the great State of Delaware.

Here are some of the concerns all across our country. We have ZF Wind, which is a gearbox manufacturing plant in Georgia. TPI Composites is a turbine plant in Rhode Island. We have the Molded Fiber Glass blade plant in Texas, and I have to return to Colorado, where we have Vestas in my home State. They have a tower facility, among others. This all adds up to a wind industry that supports thousands of good-paying American jobs.

This job-creating industry is taking off, and it could not have come at a better time for our manufacturing base, which, after a lot of tough years in the wake of the recession, is ready for resurgence in a big way.

A lot of other companies and sectors are outsourcing American jobs. While that has been happening, the wind industry is cutting against the grain and creating good-paying manufacturing jobs here in the United States. In fact, more than 50 new manufacturing facilities entered the wind energy market in the last 2 years alone. That is an impressive statistic. It is an accomplishment of which we should all be proud.

The success of the wind industry is having positive ripple effects on other areas of American manufacturing, and that is because the industry is not only growing, it is doing so while also increasing its use of American-made components.

This chart clearly makes my point. In 2007, 25 percent of all wind turbines included American-made parts. In 2012, as we can see, that number increased to more than 70 percent, and it is one of the main reasons for the dramatic increase of manufacturing facilities across our country that support this wind energy industry.

This is not just about the manifestations of the wind energy world that we think about in blades and towers. It is about gears, nuts, bolts, and all the other made-in-America components that are now helping to power our renewable energy future.

There are some worrying storm clouds on the horizon because despite all of this progress and despite all of the American jobs that are supported by this innovative industry, we are truly, again, at a crossroads for wind energy. The PTC, which I have championed, and others have joined me in this Chamber, has helped keep our American manufacturing sector strong, but once again it is going to expire in 20 days. Previously, I joined many of my colleagues on both sides of aisle—including Senator CHUCK GRASSLEY, the father of the PTC—to extend this tax credit. Now, with the clock ticking, we need to step up and give this industry the long-term certainty it needs to keep creating jobs and working toward true energy independence.

In our pursuit of a balanced approach to energy security, we have supported domestic energy production across the board.

I see my good friend from Oklahoma Senator COBURN is here.

We need an "all of the above" approach. If we let the wind PTC expire, we will put one of the cleanest sources of American-made energy at a competitive disadvantage relative to traditional energy sources, and that is because even if the production tax credit for wind expires, tax credits will continue for traditional sources of energy, such as oil and gas.

We have a choice to make: Will we act to preserve American manufacturing jobs and support domestically produced clean energy or will we choose to do nothing and let other countries claim our manufacturing jobs and the leadership of the new energy economy?

These are not trivial questions. Allowing the wind PTC to expire will cost thousands of American jobs and billions of dollars in investment. All we have to do is look at what happened to wind capacity installation over the past 15 years when the PTC has expired. Every time it expires or comes close to expiring, wind installation stalls and American jobs are lost. We see that pattern on this chart. In the year 2000 it opened, and in 2002, 2004, and now potentially again in 2013 it will expire.

In my home State, one cannot talk about manufacturing without talking about the wind industry. Wind manufacturing employs about 1,500 people in Colorado today and supports about 5,000 jobs statewide. As I alluded to earlier, we are home to several manufacturing jobs, including a tower facility, two blade plants, and a nacelle facility, which are all operated by the great Vestas company.

Last year, due to the lack of certainty about the PTC, no new orders were placed for wind turbines, and Vestas was forced to let go over 600 employees in Colorado alone. That hurt cities such as Pueblo and Brighton, whose local economies have significantly benefited from the manufacturing jobs the wind PTC supports.

After my effort and the effort of others to extend the PTC last year, orders started to flow again and Vestas is again hiring workers to meet the market demand. That is good for Colorado. These are jobs with good benefits.

What concerns me—and I know it concerns Vestas and other Colorado-based companies—is that these jobs can vanish if we don't act. That is what this is all about. These jobs can vanish if we don't act. So I am back here and renewing my call from last year. We should act now to extend the wind production tax credit or we risk losing this industry and the manufacturing jobs it creates to our competitors. Where are those competitors? They are in China, Europe, and elsewhere all over the globe. That is the last thing our economy needs.

The men and women employed in manufacturing facilities across the country are calling on us again in Congress to act. Let's heed their call. Let's act now. The PTC equals jobs. Let's pass it as soon as possible. Let's save these American jobs by extending the production tax credit.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 944

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I rise today to urge Senate passage of S. 944, the Veterans Health and Benefits Improvement Act of 2013. This bipartisan legislation is the result of months of hard work by my colleagues on both sides of the aisle. This legislation was passed out of committee by voice vote. There were no objections that took place on July 24, and this legislation is paid for.

Furthermore, this legislation is supported by nearly every major veteran and military service organization in our country, including the Iraq and Afghanistan Veterans of America, the Military Officers Association of America, the American Legion, the Vietnam Veterans of America, the Association of the United States Navy, the Reserve Officers Association, the Jewish War Veterans, the Enlisted Association of the National Guard of the United States, the National Association for Uniformed Services, AMVETS, Gold Star Wives, and the National Congress of American Indians.

In fact, I think it would be a very good statement about what we are trying to do as a nation if the Senate could pass this comprehensive veterans bill before we adjourn so we can get about the business of working with our House colleagues to get important veterans legislation passed by both bodies signed into law.

I will briefly highlight some of the key provisions of this very important piece of legislation.

Again, this legislation is bipartisan; it came out of the committee unanimously; and it has the support of virtually every veterans organization.

Ranking Member BURR and I have worked together on a provision that would help servicemembers transition back into civilian life by making recently separated veterans eligible for tuition at the in-state rates. This has been a very contentious issue, but what we do is make recently separated veterans eligible for tuition at the in-state rate, which is something many of the veterans organizations and people all over this country have wanted.

Given the nature of our Armed Forces, servicemembers have little to say as to where they serve and where they reside during military service. This legislation would help our brave men and women who have sacrificed so much in the defense of our country transition by giving them a fair shot at attaining their educational goals without incurring an additional financial burden simply because they chose to serve their country.

I know this issue was discussed a great deal in the House and it was discussed here a great deal, and we have reached resolution on this important issue.

Further, while the Pentagon, Congress, and other stakeholders continue to work to end sexual assault within the ranks—this is an enormously important issue—I want to do everything within my power as chairman of the VA to ensure that the VA is a warm and welcoming place for those survivors of military assault. That is why this legislation contains important provisions that would improve the delivery of care and benefits to veterans who experience sexual trauma while serving in the military. This was inspired by Ruth Moore, who struggled for 23 years to receive VA disability compensation.

It would expand access to VA counseling and care to members of the Guard and Reserves who experience sexual assault during inactive-duty training. It also takes a number of steps to improve the adjudication of claims based on military sexual trauma.

This legislation would give the VA additional tools to do all it can to provide victims of sexual trauma with the care and benefits they need to confront the emotional and physical consequences of these horrific acts. Maintaining the VA's world-class health care system remains a priority for this committee, and this legislation does just that.

I am pleased we were able to respond to calls from veterans to increase access to complementary and alternative medicine for the treatment of chronic pain, mental health conditions, and chronic disease. By expanding the availability of these treatment options, we can enhance the likelihood that veterans get the treatment they need in ways that work for them.

Additionally, this legislation calls for the VA to promote healthy weight in veterans by increasing their access to fitness facilities. A healthy weight is critical to combating multiple chronic diseases, including diabetes and heart disease. By managing veterans' obesity, we can both improve their overall health and reduce the costs to the health care system.

Every Member of this body knows all too well the challenges of the claims backlog. I am pleased to see that the VA is making progress on this complex issue, but much more remains to be done. This legislation supports VA's ongoing efforts and would make needed improvements to the claims system. Among a number of claims-related provisions, this bill, for the first time, would require the Department of Veterans Affairs to publicly report on both claims processing goals and actual production. This would allow Congress and the public to closely track and measure VA's progress on this difficult issue.

This bill also addresses a number of concerns presented to the Veterans' Affairs Committee by the Gold Star Wives earlier this year by improving the benefits and services provided to surviving spouses.

The Veterans Health and Benefits Improvement Act would provide additional dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses with children in order to provide financial support during the difficult period following the loss of a loved one.

This bill also expands the Marine Gunnery Sergeant John David Fry Scholarship to include surviving spouses of members of the Armed Forces who died in the line of duty.

The Veterans Health and Benefits Improvement Act contains provisions that will improve the lives of our Nation's servicemembers, veterans, and their survivors. I am proud of the bipartisan manner in which the Veterans' Affairs Committee has conducted its business to produce this important legislation. Our veterans deserve far more help from the Congress than they have received.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 258, S. 944; that the committee-reported substitute amendment be agreed to; that the bill, as amended, be read a third time and passed; that the committee-reported title amendment be agreed to; and that the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COBURN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. SANDERS. Well, I am disappointed that there is objection to a bill that came out of committee without objection, that was done in a bipartisan manner, that is paid for, and that has the support of virtually every veterans organization.

I hope that even though there is an objection to the unanimous consent, there would not be an objection to a rollcall vote on this bill.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. President, there will be an objection to a rollcall vote because the opportunity to amend this bill has not been made available to Members of the Senate. I have two specific concerns with the bill—I am writing my whole letter right now on this bill—and until they are addressed, I am going to hold this bill until I have an opportunity to make them known.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SANDERS. I understand the Senator's objection. I am disappointed. It takes forever to get anything done in this body, and we have a situation now where we have seen a process develop in the Committee on Veterans' Affairs by which there has been bipartisan support. It is kind of the way things are supposed to be done. Yet because of the objection, we are going to be unable to move forward in the way I think most of the Members want.

Thank you very much. I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, what I am trying to do is this: We were told to come down here at 4 o'clock. I was glad to be able to discuss things earlier. So what I would like to talk about, with the Chair's permission, is the military retiree provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Chair.

No. 1, I wish to say to our budget chairman we had a very good discussion with Senators CHAMBLISS and ISAKSON about trying to figure out a way to fix this provision in the budget deal. I am very disappointed we can't have an amendment to fix it or amendments to do other things, but we are where we are.

So the bottom line is this has been a healthy exercise because all of us are now looking at the provision. This is a bipartisan product, so it is not about blaming Democrats or Republicans. It is a good exercise. How could a bill—this bill, as we all know, doesn't fund the government. If we pass the budget—and I am sure it will pass here eventually—it doesn't keep the government open; it sets limits on spending where we are increasing the amount we can spend on defense and nondefense, setting sequestration aside. That is a great thing. I think that is going to be good. How we pay for it is the problem.

The question is, How did this happen? The chairman of the Senate Budget Committee and the chairman in the House are great folks. The military retiree provision is a pay-for that has everybody wondering a bit and, upon a second evaluation, is probably certainly not the right thing to do.

In May of 2014, there will be a commission that was set up by the Congress to tell us how best to reform military pay and benefits, because they are unsustainable, quite frankly, in the future. But we put in that Commission report a requirement that any reform could not affect those who are in the service now; they are grandfathered. I think the reason the Congress did that is we don't want to break faith with those who signed up for deal A. They are doing their part of the deal. They are serving. The Congress is looking for a way to make these programs more sustainable by applying it in the future, which I think we should do. About the civilian employee contribution to their retirement program, that is prospective. The one thing I was disappointed about is the money doesn't go into the retirement plan to pay for the deal.

I wish to acknowledge what Senator WARREN has been doing with every Gang of 6, 12, 8, 10, 14—just different numbers—trying to find a way. I know entitlement programs are the source of the problem for the Nation over the long term, and military retirement programs such as TRICARE we have to look at as a retirement system. That is not a problem. But we are in a hurry to basically pass a budget that generally I support. It gets us out of the situation of sequestration.

But how did this happen? How could we have picked a pay-for such as this which is, to me, unacceptable. The military retirement community, up to the age of 62, will have their COLA reduced by 1 percent. That doesn't sound like a lot, but the compounding of that goes like this: If a person is a master sergeant who retires after 20 years of service in 2015 at, say, 42, by the time that person gets to 62, the effect of this bill will cost him or her $71,000. That is the compounding effect of money. No one has ever suggested it should be applied to people who are almost at retirement or in retirement when it comes to how we reform benefits.

My good friend Senator MCCAIN, who has earned every penny he has ever gotten in retirement and then some, mentioned the Bowles-Simpson Commission. I am a general fan of Bowles-Simpson: reform entitlements and flatten out the Tax Code and, yes, pay down some debt. I am a Republican. It would eliminate the deduction in the Tax Code and apply some of the money to the debt, not put it all in tax cuts, because when we are $17 trillion in debt, we have to do things we would otherwise not like. I am willing to do that. But Bowles-Simpson did not, as my friend Senator MCCAIN suggests, adopt eliminating COLAs before 62 as part of their solution. They wanted to find $70 billion over 10 years for Federal workforce entitlement reform. They created a commission, the Federal Workforce Entitlement Task Force Commission, to reevaluate civil service, military health and retirement programs. They did not say we are going to eliminate COLAs entirely for the military and civilian workers; they said, we need a commission to look are to how to find $70 billion over the next 10 years. The examples they gave of what we might look at is use the highest 5 years of earnings to calculate the civil service pension benefits for new retirees, defer cost-of-living adjustment is the second one, adjust the ratio of employer-employee contributions to Federal employee pension plans to equalize contributions, which saves $4 billion. These were examples.

They wanted a commission. Guess what. So did the Congress. In 2013—this came out in 2010—the Congress said let's form a commission to look at this. The problem is the Commission hasn't reported back to us. They are not due to do so until May 2014. We did put a prohibition on the Commission's work product: You have to grandfather existing servicemembers. You can't retroactively apply any of your reforms.

So Bowles-Simpson did not say we are going to eliminate all COLAs; they said, form a commission, and that was one example of what to look at. The Congress did form a commission. The commission is not back yet. But the Congress told the Commission to grandfather people who are in the current system, but we forgot to tell ourselves that because this pay-for is retroactive in nature and applies to all retirees, past, present, and future.

The disability component, the people who drafted this assumed disability retirees would not be included. They are. The $600 million, CBO says, of the $6.3 billion that this provision generates in revenue to help pay for the deal—$600 million comes from the disability retired community, and I think we all understand that is not the right thing to do. Someone who has lost a limb in Afghanistan or Iraq who is disabled, can't work, they get benefits outside of disability retirement, and they have earned those benefits. But reducing their COLAs would add thousands of dollars, tens of thousands of dollars in lost benefits. Nobody wants to do that. They thought they weren't included. They are.

Let me just say as someone who has been around the military—I am a military lawyer, so I am not a frontline military person by any means. I have tried to be the best military lawyer I can be. I have been in the military for 30 years. I love the culture, love the environment, and I try to be part of the team. The military lawyer is part of the team. The pilots who go fly and face danger, they are the heroes. The maintenance guys and the guys on the frontlines in the Army, to them goes the glory.

The bottom line is I don't think it is fair for us to consider. If you are in the MRAP that didn't get hit by the IED and you made it through your tour, you have earned your retirement just as much as anybody else, and that disabled retiree needs the money more than anybody. They get things the average military retiree doesn't because their needs are greater.

All I am doing is begging the body: Let's not pass a budget deal with a pay-for that violates our own Commission requirements, that in hindsight is not the message we want to send to those who serve now. It is not a good way to recruit.

Let's see if we can fix this. Let's see if we can fix it before it gets into law, because once we get something into law, we all know how hard it is to take it out.

Ms. AYOTTE. Mr. President, would the Senator from South Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM. I do. Before I do, I wish to say that the Senator from Mississippi asked a question in our conference: Tell me what this costs our retirees. All of us on the Republican side looked at him, me included—I didn't have a clue how to answer that, and when I found out it was $71,000, almost $72,000 for E-7, from 42 to 62, I about fell out of my chair. Now I know how you generate $6 billion.

As to the Senator from New Hampshire, she was the first one to take this torch up and run with it, and I have been trying to help where I can. But I will yield for a question.

Ms. AYOTTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from South Carolina for his leadership on this important issue. What I want to ask the Senator is this. Some have come to this floor and said: Pass this budget agreement, and we will fix this later. Does the Senator think that is a good way to solve this problem?

Mr. GRAHAM. That is a good question. The best way is to fix it before it passes, and we have until January 15. Nobody wants to shut the government down. Again, the budget deal is just about numbers. We have to actually appropriate. But I think we could. There are so many different ways. I have thrown out the idea of eliminating subsidies for people who make over $250,000 for their Part D premiums. It is $54 billion over 10 years. I am not asking my Democratic colleagues to go to food stamps and safety nets. I am not asking them to do that, and I am surely not going to ask the Republicans to raise taxes. There are better ways to do it.

So I could not agree more with the Senator from New Hampshire. With a little bit of effort here in the next few hours or days, we could fix this in total.

Ms. AYOTTE. Of all the people who deserve our effort, doesn't the Senator think we could stay here as long as we need to before the holidays—a little bit of inconvenience for us—to fix this? Because one thing I see from this is we are saying to our military retirees: Do not worry. Trust the politicians in Washington to fix something they voted for.

Here we are. We know the problem is here now. People yet have not had a final vote on this budget agreement. Yet they are still saying: Oh, we know the problem is there, but we are going to vote for it anyway. I do not understand this.

If you are someone who is serving our country, what kind of message does that send?

Mr. GRAHAM. In all honesty, the provision does not take effect for a year or two. But I think what the Senator is saying is so important. Why leave any doubt in people's mind? They have enough to worry about already. Life is hard for all of us. For some people life is just incredibly hard. I have lived a fortunate life. But for a military retiree who is not disabled, it matters to them.

So we should not create stress where none is needed. They have been stressed out enough. The last 10 years have been hard as hell for them—multiple deployments. Senator WARNER and all of us would go overseas. You would see the same people. I would do small Reserve tours just for a few days in Iraq and Afghanistan. I am seeing the same people in Afghanistan who I saw in Iraq in my career field of being a JAG working on detention matters. I do not think the average American—they appreciate but I do not think they really understand how hard this has been on 1 percent of the American people.

So wouldn't it be nice if they did not have to worry and we could get this issue behind us? Because here is the truth of the matter: It may come as a shock to the body, but we are not in very good standing right now. That is a bipartisan problem. Here is the concern. The main things that have been fixed that are wrong? Not a whole lot. It is hard to fix things.

Ms. AYOTTE. Right.

Mr. GRAHAM. The unraveling effect is what people worry about. If you fix it for the military retirees, what about the civilians? I am willing to look at that. But the bottom line is they fought hard. They fought long. They have earned what they got. We should not retroactively diminish their retirement. They have worried enough. Let's do not give them anything to worry about for the holidays. Let's take this one off the table.

Ms. AYOTTE. I could not agree with the Senator from South Carolina more. I heard the chairman of the Budget Committee say the fact that disabled veterans are included in this, those who have had a medical retirement—we have talked about them; we have been to Walter Reed; we have seen those who have sacrificed so much for our country and are getting a cut to their cost-of-living increase in their retirement under this agreement—that this was somehow a “technical glitch” or something.

If it is a technical glitch that we know is there, why are we going home before it is fixed? I do not understand it and even putting one shred of doubt in their minds that we stand with them, and that we know this problem exists in this bill, and that it can be fixed.

Mr. GRAHAM. Just to respond, I think this is what happens when you are trying to get something done late in the year. We are all adults. We have had months to deal with these issues. I sort of hate the fact that you are dealing with important things like the Defense authorization bill a day or 2 before everybody wants to go home for Christmas. Eventually, that leads to $17 trillion in debt.

How do you get to $17 trillion in debt? It takes bipartisanship.

Ms. AYOTTE. Right.

Mr. GRAHAM. No one party can get you there. This is the way you have run the place. What happens when you fill up the tree? You cannot fix things. Here is what is wrong with that. You cannot fix the things that politically are bad for you and expect the rest of us to go away quietly because we have something we want to do. So this filling of the tree process is not good for something this big, and I hope people would be responsible with their amendments.

But, again, it goes back to how did this happen? I do not believe for a moment that PATTY MURRAY or PAUL RYAN meant to hurt disabled veterans. I do not believe that. I think the whole issue was not looked at. These things are put together very quickly. I am on the Budget Committee. The Senator from New Hampshire is on the Budget Committee. The Senator from Alabama is on the Budget Committee. I had no idea. Nobody asked me if this was a good idea. I did not even get to look at it. I got to read about it in the paper.

That is what happens when you put the deals together with just a handful of people. You make mistakes, because the more eyes the better. You find yourself here talking about something, quite frankly, that we all know is wrong.

Ms. AYOTTE. Right.

Mr. GRAHAM. We need to fix it. We are creating a lot of anxiety for people who are going through enough anxiety. I hope we can rise to the occasion here at the end.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. GRAHAM. Absolutely.

Mr. SESSIONS. I say to Senator GRAHAM, he has served in the House. I know the powers that be would just like to see this bill rubber stamped, passed, done with, rah, rah, rah. But if this legislation were to be amended, and this problem were fixed, doesn't the Senator think the House would have ample time to pass it before the January 15 date for the CR, or, really, they could, as we have done many times, extend the CR a week or so, if needed? But I do not really think it would be needed. I think they would pass it promptly.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the Senator is absolutely right. We have a legislative process that could rise to the occasion if we would use it. For 200 years we have been doing business a certain way, and the Senate is changing, all for the worse. Like I say, this is a bipartisan problem. I am not blaming PATTY MURRAY, the Democratic chairman. This got into a bill that was bipartisan. It got 330 votes, 70 percent of the Republican Conference. We all make mistakes. But how did it get there? Nobody will tell me who put this in there because they do not know.

So the Senator is right. I think our House colleagues would find the equities of the matter easy to resolve. They would come back and fix it in just no time. I think we could fix it. The offsets might be hard to find in terms of our ideological differences, but I think we could find some offsets to fix this pretty quickly. Yes, I say to Senator SESSIONS, the House would be able to do it too.

One final plea. I would hope that as we go into the holiday season the acrimony that has been created in this body about different aspects of the way we run the place—that we do not miss a chance to do the right thing. They come on a lot here. It is not like we do not get a chance to do the right thing as Republicans and Democrats. We just both do not rise to the occasion enough.

But here is a chance to do the right thing and a very necessary thing. Maybe if we rose to the occasion here, it might lead to doing more right things. I will leave here as an optimist and hope and pray we do the right thing while we still can.

I yield.

Ms. AYOTTE. Let me just say, we can do the right thing. We do not have to set our expectations so low that we cannot come together and find a pay-for that is acceptable to both sides of the aisle that says what we should say to our men and women in uniform; and that is: Thank you. Thank you. God bless you. The first responsibility of our Nation is to defend our Nation and to keep it safe. Of all the things that would keep us here—would keep us here till Christmas—I think this is one of the most important things we could do for the people who go in there first for us and ensure that we have the privilege of being on this floor, have the privilege of going home and spending the holidays with our families.

So of all the things, to say that this is not possible, I think it is very possible, and we should have the will to do it for our men and women in uniform. We should have the will to do it for those who have been disabled because of their brave service in the line of duty for this country. I would hope we would rise to the very best of this body and fix this and not go home for the holidays with any uncertainty for our military retirees or our men and women in uniform of where we stand, and we stand with them.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, when I first came to Washington, considering running for the Senate, I went to a Republican luncheon, and they asked me to say just a thing or two, not that long, and I said: I could think of no greater honor than to represent the people of Alabama in the greatest deliberative body in the history of the world. This is a great deliberative body. That is our heritage, and it is being eroded. It is not disputable that it is being eroded. It is being eroded in a way that is faster and more significant than any of us seem to understand. Like the frog in the warming water, we do not realize we are being cooked and that the freedoms of Americans are being cooked.

This bill contains another provision that constricts the ability of a minority in the Senate—it could be Democrats or Republicans or just a bipartisan group who do not represent a majority but have a concern—to have those concerns heard and dealt with, and it is very significant. I wish it were not so.

I was shocked it was in the bill. I had no idea it would be in the bill. As Senator GRAHAM just indicated, this started out as a bipartisan, bicameral conference, and Senator AYOTTE and Senator GRAHAM and Senator WICKER and I were members of the conference. We met and had a couple of public meetings where everybody talked, but no legislation, no language was laid out. The next thing we heard: The conference leaders are drafting a bill—I would say affectionately, a gang of two this time.

So this is the bill that was their product. I know they were trying to work out an important solution to America's financial problems. I know the differences between the parties are so great that it is difficult to bridge those disagreements, and we were not expecting a great solution to the long-term financial state of America—that needs to be dealt with, must be dealt with, and every year we wait makes it harder to fix that challenge we face.

But I did not expect some of the damage we have seen in the legislation. I have to talk about a certain point because it changed the rules of the Senate. I am not sure the House Members understood how significant it was. But three times I have made objections to budget violations—three times—and we contended that the bill before the Senate was spending and would spend more money than the Budget Control Act allowed to be spent. If that is so—the Budget Control Act being in law, having certain limits on spending—then the Senate would have to recognize we were busting the budget and we would have to have 60 votes, a super majority, to approve busting the budget, a pretty good matter. It does not make any difference if there are taxes and fees used to pay for that. It still spends more than the amount of money we agreed to spend. It allowed us to contain spending.

There were three different votes in the last year or so in which the Senate was stopped from spending more than the Budget Control Act limit required because 60 Senators would not vote for it. There were not 60 who would support waiving the budget, breaking the budget, spending above the budget.

So that is the issue at stake. I am sure the spenders were deeply disappointed. They got over 50. Under this bill now, it only takes 50. They got over 50, but they did not get 60, so they were not able to continue that spending.

This agreement, this bill that is before us today, would significantly weaken the ability of Senators in this body to enforce the spending and revenue limits under our budget resolution and in future budgets.

The Ryan-Murray agreement that is before us today includes an egregious number of deficit-neutral reserve funds—57, to be exact. Operationally a reserve fund allows the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee to adjust the spending limits in a budget resolution prior to Senate consideration of a bill that busts the budget. This allows the proposed legislation to avoid most spending points of order.

A reserve fund can be a useful tool when used in the context of a true budget resolution, one that is properly negotiated in public by a conference committee rather than a backroom deal. Reserve funds can shepherd legislation with common policy goals through the House and Senate by accommodating minor differences between the budget plan and the final legislation. So that makes sense. Reserve funds are not a total fraud. Congress does not want legislation they agreed to in concept to get tripped by scoring differences. That is why reserve funds were originally created. But there is virtually nothing policywise in common between the House and Senate budget resolution that we are seeing today. They are quite different.

The House Ryan budget is a historic budget that alters the debt course of America and puts us on a sound path. The Senate budget that cleared this body, over my objection, would raise taxes $1 trillion, but instead of using those takes revenues to pay down the debt, it would have funded $1 trillion in more spending above the Budget Control Act limit we agreed to in August of 2011. So that is the situation. These are different budgets.

With 57 different reserve funds, the Murray-Ryan spending bill that is before us now will allow Senator REID and Chairman MURRAY to bring to the floor a practically unlimited number of big tax-and-spend bills. It will not be subject to the 60-vote limit. Normally the minority party would be able to raise a point of order under section 302(f) of the Budget Act. The 302(f) is known as the tax-and-spend point of order, because it is the one we deploy when Congress tries to spend more money than it promised to spend, and offsets that new spending with some fee or tax increase. It is the point of order we deploy when Democrats, on these occasions I have mentioned, with some Republicans supporting it, want to grow the size of government. It takes 60 votes to get around a 302(f) point of order and it forces colleagues to go on record and say: Yes, I know my legislation will bust the budget, but we ask that we do it anyway.

What I found as we have looked at it, when you shine light on these votes, and votes on the floor of the Senate, and ask: Senator, do you really want to spend more than we agreed to spend? You just agreed in August of 2011 to the Budget Control Act. It said, we are not going to spend over this level. A bill hits the floor that spends over that level. They say: Do not worry about it, it is paid for by taxes. Do you really want to do that when it is raised as a budget point of order? Well, Senators kind of get shy and many of them back off what they might otherwise have agreed to if that issue were not raised.

As I said, there were three successive votes in which this Congress refused to bust the budget and spend more than was agreed to. It rankled some of our Members who like to spend. They did not like that. But the sheer number of reserve funds in the legislation before us, 57, would essentially take that point of order away. There are so many reserve funds in this bill that Senator REID and Chairman MURRAY can bring an endless number of tax-and-spend bills to the floor, and my colleagues and I would be unable to shine light on that and be able to have a clean vote on one question—not whether we favored the idea they want to spend money on. That was not the question. The question, when you raise a budget point of order, is: Do you believe we should break the spending limits that we agreed to? If you can fund your bill and your cause that you believe in by finding savings elsewhere in the budget, then we might support that. But we are not going to support spending more than we agreed to. That is what this budget point of order has allowed us to do on a series of occasions.

I believe it is causing a lot of people to come to me and Chairman MURRAY when they offer legislation to make sure they are within the budget. They go back and try to draft it in a way that does not violate the budget. But eliminating this budget point of order will reduce the number of people who are concerned about that. We will see less discipline, in my opinion.

In summary, the reserve fund would allow the Senate majority or a number of Senators who have got legislation on the floor to avoid this tough vote in the light of day so people can see what has occurred. Moreover, there is a little-understood danger in this legislation that goes beyond spending. It really does. This bill can allow legislation that would carry measures that are disproportionately policy heavy with very little budgetary effect. We believe, as we have analyzed the bill, that it could allow reserve funds to be used to increase the minimum wage, to change voter registration laws, to extend unemployment insurance and offset it with some tax increase somewhere, regulate greenhouse gas emissions, and more.

There is little that can be done in the Congress to stop that which could have been done previously. This will allow this to go forward in a way heretofore not done. So I urge my colleagues not to sit idly by and watch the rights of the Senate get pounded into the dirt. It is better to have their individual authorities from whatever State and whatever party they come from to be able to highlight these problems. So I will ask unanimous consent today to offer an amendment that would strike the reserve funds from this legislation that is before us.

I encourage my colleagues to support that effort. If you care about this Senate as an institution, if you care about the right of free debate and the ability to actually amend legislation, if you care about the heritage of the Senate and the importance of constraining spending, then I would urge support of my unanimous consent request.

Mr. President, I would formally ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending motion so that I may offer a motion to concur with the amendment numbered 2573 which is filed at the desk which would accomplish what I have described.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN). Is there objection?

The senior Senator from Washington State is recognized.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to first note that every one of the reserve funds included in this bipartisan bill was also included and voted on as part of the Senate-passed 2014 budget resolution. None of this material is new. My colleagues have seen and voted on every one of those reserve funds.

In the 9 months since the Senate passed the budget, I cannot recall, frankly, a single time that a Member came up to me and raised an issue regarding one of those reserve funds.

I similarly would like to point out that reserve funds are not new. The Senate has actually relied on reserve funds to help it carry out its priorities under the annual budget process for nearly 30 years. The authority to include them is specifically authorized in law by section 301(b)(7) of the Congressional Budget Act.

In fact, reserve funds are so common and accepted by Republicans and Democrats alike that Senators actually filed more than 300 of them during the debate on the 2014 budget resolution.

Let me repeat that for everyone. Senators filed more than 300 reserve funds this year, including, by the way, a few from my friend, the Senator from Alabama.

So if there is anything that should be noncontroversial, it should be including some of these reserve funds that were debated and agreed to last spring.

More fundamentally, the bipartisan agreement now before the Senate will ensure that the Senate once again has a budget. That is a good thing. Having a budget and the discipline of enforceable spending levels will strengthen enforcement, not weaken it. If you do not have a budget, you do not have a spending level you can enforce, you lose discipline and the ability to raise certain points of order. We fix that actually in this agreement.

I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, these provisions that allow the objections to the abuse of reserve funds have been in law since 1985, 30 years almost. This has been the law that we have. I raised objections to the tax-and-spend point of order and it has been sustained on the floor of the Senate. The Senate budget resolution that Senator MURRAY referred to is the one that would increase spending $1 trillion over what was agreed to in 2011, August of 2011, and would add $1 trillion in taxes.

Then they changed this rule. This legislation alters that from the past. The budget resolution she referred to did pass the Senate with Democratic votes only. It was a simple majority. But this is legislation that changes the Budget Act. I feel strongly we have to absolutely understand what has happened here. The rule has been changed. Power that Senators had to block tax-and-spend legislation that breaks spending limits has been eroded significantly. It should not have been a part of any legislation that purports to be legislation that puts this Nation on a financial path of soundness. In fact, it does the opposite. It weakens the ability of Senators who want to hold this Congress to its own spending limits agreed to in law. It weakens their ability to stop breaking those spending limits. There is no doubt about that. I am really upset about it. I think it is historic.

I understand that the House maybe did not fully understand what was meant here. Maybe we can somehow revise this. But in truth we should do it now. We should not pass this bill that contains this legislation. Had we had a normal conference committee—and I had been a member of it and other Senators had been a member of that conference committee and had a chance to talk about it, it would not have been in there. Maybe that is why they chose not to have a public, open discussion of it, because they wanted to slip this through in the dead of night, up next to Christmas. Oh, you have got to pass this bill just as it is. There can be no amendments. The government will shut down. We will all have to stay here until Christmas Eve, as we had to, to try to stop ObamaCare that they passed on Christmas Eve. So this is the kind of thing that is not healthy for America. It is not healthy for the Senate.

Reserve funds are a function of policy. There is no common policy between the House and the Senate on budget resolutions. Budget resolutions are passed by each House, but we do not have common policies there about how it is processed. Never have we adopted the volume of reserve funds that will hereafter be longstanding parts of our law.

I believe we have a time to begin our wrapup now. Let me say Senator MURRAY is a good, strong advocate. She is effective in her leadership role. I respect her and enjoy working with her. We sometimes disagree.

I wish to say, as we move to conclude this legislation, that I respect the Senator, and we move forward.

Mrs. MURRAY. Does the Senator need additional time?

Mr. SESSIONS. Yes.

Mrs. MURRAY. How much additional time?

Mr. SESSIONS. Ten minutes.

Mrs. MURRAY. It is gone.

Mr. SESSIONS. I would ask that the unanimous consent be equally divided.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I believe the unanimous consent that was previously entered allowed me the last 10 minutes, and the Senator from Alabama the prior 10 minutes, so most of that time has been used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama has about 2 minutes remaining and the Senator from Washington State has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. SESSIONS. What time is the vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time expires at 4:27 p.m.

Mr. SESSIONS. How did it get to be at 4:27 p.m. instead of 4:30?

I ask unanimous consent the vote be held at 4:30, and I will wrap up in the time remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Reserving the right to object, I will not object if I could have 1 minute now on a matter of some importance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mrs. MURRAY. I am not sure—I do not object to the President pro tempore's request for 1 minute.

Mr. SESSIONS. I would object if it is counted against my time.

Mrs. MURRAY. Maybe I can help us all out here. The Senator from Alabama has been speaking for about 25 minutes. I am pleased to give the Senator from Alabama 4 minutes, the President pro tempore 1 minute, and I will take the final minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I thought we were voting at 4:30 and there would be 5 minutes left for me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Postcloture time expires at 4:27.

Mr. SESSIONS. I will accept the kind and generous offer of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SESSIONS. I was concerned about Senator LEAHY. If I would have 4 minutes, I would consent to the Senator—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. SESSIONS. If I would have 4 minutes—I would ask unanimous consent that the vote be delayed until I have 4 minutes and Senator LEAHY has 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. The bill before us today is a perfect example of why it is dangerous to produce a deal in secret and rush it through on the floor of Congress in a panic, as we have done time and time again. This bill is a perfect example of why we need regular order, why the Senate is supposed to be a deliberative body that debates and amends legislation—there is no amendment being allowed to this legislation—and why each Senator is supposed to have a chance to have their say and offer amendments to the bill. Each Senator in this Chamber, Republican and Democrat, is being diminished if they are not allowed to have an amendment on an important piece of legislation such as this.

I was astonished to hear earlier that we have no choice but to pass this bill exactly as it is, that there is no other alternative. What about letting the Senate work its will, I suggest. Could we not find 51 Senators who could have agreed on a better way to save money than to cut retired military personnel, a cut that was used to increase spending in other areas, some of which is clearly not more significant than the cuts falling on military retired personnel?

We learn after the House has passed the bill, that also includes a cut to the pensions of wounded warriors and—I suspect most House Members didn't realize that, as my friend from Mississippi has pointed out.

We were blocked yesterday from having a vote, and it looks as if we will continue to be blocked. We will move to final passage, and there will be no opportunity to amend this bill and the big $500 billion Defense authorization bill that will be on the floor next immediately. Thereafter, it will be voted on tomorrow, and there will be no amendments to it.

This is unprecedented to have the Defense bill on the floor when we often have 30 or more amendments. Zero. We don't have time, we have wasted our time on all kinds of things. We had a whole week in which there were two measly votes conducted when 30 or more could have been conducted easily that week, and there wouldn't have been that many votes on the Senate bill.

I would say that I do not believe this legislation is sound legislation. I believe it does damage to the ability of this Senate to protect the Treasury of the United States of America. I think it takes us down the road to eroding the power of individual Senators to constrain spending and stay within the limits we agreed to, that we put in law. I am not happy about it. I wish I had more time to talk about it. I don't.

I appreciate the opportunity to work with Senator MURRAY. I greatly respect Congressman RYAN. But there are some problems with this legislation. We should not pass it, and there is plenty of time for the House of Representatives to respond to any changes we were to make.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator pro tempore is recognized.

Mr. LEAHY. The White House has released a report that was prepared by the President's Review Group on Intelligence and Communications Technologies. The message is very clear. The message to the NSA is now coming from every branch of government, from every corner of our Nation: NSA, you have gone too far. The bulk collection of Americans' data by the U.S. Government has to end.

The review group came to the same conclusion that I have about the utility of the section 215 phone records program, the same conclusion that Judge Leon found just the other day, calling it unconstitutional. They said the section 215 program was "not essential to preventing attacks and could readily have been obtained in a timely manner using conventional section 215 orders."

They say what many of us have been saying, that just because we can collect massive amounts of data doesn't mean we should do so.

The report states:

Although we might be safer if the government had ready access to a massive storehouse of information about every detail of our lives, the impact of such a program on the quality of life and on individual freedom would simply be too great.

Senator LEE, I, and others have legislation to curtail this. I think for the sake of our Nation and the sake of our Constitution we should.

In October, I introduced with Senator LEE the USA FREEDOM Act—a bipartisan and bicameral bill that ends the dragnet collection of Americans' phone records and recalibrates the government's surveillance authorities. This is commonsense legislation that has broad support from legislators across the political spectrum, civil liberties groups, and technology companies such as Microsoft, Apple, Google, and Yahoo.

I welcome the report and call on the President to immediately consider implementing the recommendations that can be achieved without legislation. I have invited the members of the President's Review Group to testify before the Senate Judiciary Committee next month, and look forward to discussing their important recommendations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from the State of Washington is recognized.

Mrs. MURRAY. The American people are sick and tired of the constant crises that we have seen in Washington, DC, over the past few years. They want us to work together, they want us to solve problems, and they want us to focus on jobs, families, and broad-based economic growth. That is why I am so pleased we are now headed to a final vote on the budget agreement that Chairman RYAN and I reached that breaks through this partisanship and gridlock and shows that Congress can function when Democrats and Republicans work together to make some compromises for the good of the country.

The Bipartisan Budget Act puts jobs and economic growth first by rolling back those automatic and harmful cuts to education, medical research, infrastructure investments, and defense jobs for the next 2 years. If we didn't get a deal, we would have faced another continuing resolution that would have locked in those damaging automatic cuts or, worse, a potential government shutdown in only a few short weeks.

This bill we are about to vote on replaces almost two-thirds of the cuts for this year to the domestic discretionary investments and, importantly, it prevents the next round of defense cuts that is scheduled to hit in January.

It is not going to solve every problem the automatic cuts have caused, but it is a step in the right direction and a dramatic improvement over the status quo.

This bill builds on the $2.5 trillion in deficit reduction we have done since 2011 with an additional $23 billion in responsible savings across the Federal budget.

Crucially, we protected the fragile economic recovery by spreading the savings out responsibly over the next 10 years and maintained the key precedent that sequestration cannot be replaced with spending cuts alone.

This bill isn't exactly what I would have written on my own—and I am pretty sure it is not what Chairman RYAN would have written on his own—but it is what the American people have called for, a compromise. That means neither side got everything they wanted and both sides had to give a bit.

I am hopeful this deal can be a foundation for continued bipartisan work, because we do have a lot of big challenges ahead of us for our families and communities that we all represent.

As we wind this down and go to a vote in a minute, I especially wish to thank my colleague across the aisle, Chairman RYAN, for his work with me over the past 2 months. He stood with courage, an honest broker, and a tough negotiator, but in the end we were able to come to an agreement and I wish to commend him for that.

I thank ranking member CHRIS VAN HOLLEN, who worked steadfastly with us.

I thank Leader REID and all of our leadership for their support throughout this budget process as we worked to negotiate this deal and move it through the Senate.

I also particularly thank the members of the Senate Budget Committee who worked so hard to pass a budget, start a conference, and reach this bipartisan deal—Senators RON WYDEN, BILL NELSON, DEBBIE STABENOW, BERNIE SANDERS, SHELDON WHITEHOUSE, MARK WARNER, JEFF MERKLEY, CHRIS COONS, TAMMY BALDWIN, TIM KAINE, and ANGUS KING. They were great members of our Budget Committee, and I thank them for their diligent work this year, as well as all of the Republicans on our committee who worked so hard with us.

Finally, I thank all of our staffs who have spent so many hours on putting this together.

From my office, Budget Committee staff director Evan Schatz; our deputy staff director John Righter; Budget Committee communications director Eli Zupnick; my chief of staff Mike Spahn; and all of our staff members, too numerous to mention right now, but I want each and every one of them to know how much I appreciate the intense work they put into all of this. I will insert all of their names in the RECORD.

I also thank Chairman RYAN's office; Budget Committee staff director Austin Smythe; policy director Jonathan Burks; and many more who helped us be successful.

I also thank David Krone from Leader REID's office and Kris Sarri from the Office of Management and Budget.

I thank Director Doug Elmendorf, Bob Sunshine, Pete Fontaine, and all of the staff at the Congressional Budget Office for their innumerable hard work and support.

We are at the end of the time. I urge all of our colleagues now to support this Bipartisan Budget Act of 2013. We are about to put jobs and economic growth first and, most importantly, we are going to give the American people back some certainty that they do deserve.

Has all postcloture time expired in the motion to concur with respect to H.J. Res. 59?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has.

Mrs. MURRAY. I ask unanimous consent that the motion to concur with an amendment be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. SESSIONS. Reserving the right to object, I would note this is the way the process—the train that runs through this body and denies amendments to be allowed—occurs. At this point, there will be a move, in effect, to clear the tree so this can be passed. It is an unhealthy tree we are in, and I am disappointed that we are heading in this direction, but it points out the actual legislative steps that are required to get to final passage after the leader has filled the tree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, so ordered.

Mrs. MURRAY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to concur with amendment No. 2457 is withdrawn.

The question is on agreeing to the motion to concur.

Mrs. MURRAY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The clerk will call the roll.

Reid motion to refer the message of the House on the bill to the Committee on Armed Services, with instructions, Reid amendment No. 2554, to change the enactment date.

Reid amendment No. 2555 (to (the instructions of the motion to refer) amendment No. 2554), of a perfecting nature.

Reid amendment No. 2556 (to amendment No. 2555), of a perfecting nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Cloture having been invoked, the motion to refer falls.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join Senator INHOFE, the ranking Republican on our committee, in bringing to the floor the agreement between the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House on the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2014.

The House passed this bill last week with a vote of 350 to 69, and if we pass it in the Senate, which I am optimistic now that we will, it will mark the 53rd year in a row we have enacted this bill that is so essential to the defense of our Nation and to our men and women in uniform and their families.

I wish to thank all of the members of the Armed Services Committee and our staffs. I especially want to thank our subcommittee chairs and ranking members for the hard work they have done to get us to the finish line on this bill.

Of course, I thank Senator INHOFE for the close partnership we have had in leading this committee. We have both had the benefit of a strong relationship with the chairman and ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee, BUCK McKEON and ADAM SMITH, in our endeavor.

I share the disappointment of Senators with our inability to vote on more amendments when our committee bill was brought to the Senate floor a few weeks ago. Senator INHOFE and I spent a week on the Senate floor before Thanksgiving trying to bring up more amendments and to have them debated and voted on.

We tried to reach agreement to limit consideration to defense-related amendments, but we were unable to do that. We tried to consent to vote on two sexual assault amendments, the Gillibrand amendment and the McCaskill amendment, which had been fully debated, but we could not get consent to do that. We tried to get consent to adopt a package of 39 amendments that had been cleared on both sides, but we were unable to do even that.

It then became clear, given the Senate schedule, that our only hope of enacting a defense bill this year was to negotiate a new bill with the House Armed Services Committee on the basis of two bills: one that was reported out of the Senate Armed Services Committee, and, two, the bill that was passed by the House of Representatives, and then we decided we would seek enactment of a new bill in both Houses.

That new bill passed the House without amendment. If we fail to pass the same bill, there will be no National Defense Authorization Act this year, with the result being we would deny the Department of Defense vital authorities, we would undermine congressional oversight of the military, and we would fail in our duty to provide our men and women in uniform the support they need and deserve.

The bill before us is not a Democratic bill and it is not a Republican bill. It is a bipartisan, bicameral defense bill. It is a good bill and one that deserved the strong support it received in the House of Representatives and that I hope will receive a strong vote in the Senate tomorrow.

The bill includes hundreds of important provisions to ensure that the Department can carry out its essential national defense missions.

Here are just a few examples: Our bill extends the Department of Defense authority to pay out combat pay and hardship duty pay.

The bill extends supplemental impact aid to help local school districts educate military children.

The bill extends existing military land withdrawals at China Lake, Chocolate Mountain, and Limestone Hills that would otherwise expire, leaving the military without critical testing and training capabilities.

The bill includes a new land withdrawal, which is critical to the Marines, to expand its training area at 29 Palms.

Our bill provides needed funding for the destruction of the Syrian chemical weapons stockpile and for efforts of the Jordanian Armed Forces to secure that country's border with Syria.

Our bill enables the Department of Defense to save more than $1 billion by authorizing a number of multiyear contracts.

Our bill includes more than 30 provisions, as our Presiding Officer well knows, to address the problem of sexual assault in the military. For example, we provide every military sexual assault survivor a special victim's counsel—a lawyer who works not for commanders, not for prosecutors or defense attorneys or a court but for the victim.

We include strong new protections for survivors, for those people who have been victims, making it a crime under the Uniform Code of Military Justice to retaliate against a servicemember who reports a sexual assault and requiring that the Department of Defense inspector general review and investigate any allegation of such retaliation.

Our bill requires that commanders who become aware of a reported sexual assault immediately forward that information to criminal investigators.

Our bill ends the ability of commanders to modify findings and convictions for sexual assaults and other serious crimes.

Our bill provides that any decision by a commander not to prosecute a sexual assault complaint undergoes an automatic review by a higher command authority, which in nearly all cases would mean a general or a flag officer.

Our bill includes the Boxer amendment to make the article 32 process more like a grand jury proceeding in which the purpose is to determine probable cause rather than the current process which is used as a discovery tool by the defense.

While this change is not limited to sexual assault cases, it will mean the victim of a sexual assault will not have to appear in person and be subjected to cross-examination by the defense.

As Senators are aware, we were unable to vote on either the Gillibrand amendment or the McCaskill amendment on the floor because of procedural objections. I hope the Senate will be able to consider and vote on both of these important initiatives early next year.

Again, relative to sexual assault, our bill does contain groundbreaking reforms that will provide much needed assistance to victims of sexual assault while also helping establish a climate in the military in which there is no tolerance for sexual assault or for retaliation against those who report it.

With regard to Guantanamo, the bill we reported out of the Armed Services Committee included both language making it possible to bring detainees to the United States for trial and a provision making it easier to transfer detainees back to their home countries. The full Senate voted to retain these provisions by a 55-to-43 vote when the committee-reported bill was on the floor.

The compromise we reached includes the House prohibition on bringing Gitmo detainees to the United States but follows the Senate language generally, which provides our military greater flexibility to transfer Gitmo detainees to third countries. As a result, our military will be able to make decisions about how long to keep detainees and under what circumstances to transfer them to third countries on the basis of a real-world evaluation of risks rather than the current law, which provides an arbitrary and extreme checklist of certification requirements.

We recently received letters from our senior military leaders urging us to enact the Defense authorization bill before we leave this year.

For example, GEN Martin Dempsey, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, wrote that the authorities included in this bill "are critical to the Nation's defense and urgently needed to ensure we all keep faith with the men and women, military and civilian, selflessly serving in our Armed Forces."

GEN Ray Odierno, the Army Chief of Staff, told us:

From authorities that help us prevent and respond to sexual assault, restore readiness, allow for continuous work in our industrial base, and start important military construction projects, this NDAA is critical to your Soldiers, their Families, and the numerous local communities that support our installations.

ADM Jonathan Greenert, Chief of Naval Operations, stated that pushing the bill into the next year "would mean critical authorities expire, which would exacerbate my readiness challenge and jeopardize our commitment to our service men and women."

Gen. James Amos, Commandant of the Marine Corps, wrote:

Without an NDAA, landmark legislation transforming the Uniform Code of Military Justice and improving the support provided to victims of sexual assault will be lost.

He continued:

I am also concerned about the adverse impact on logistical support for Coalition forces in Afghanistan, our ability to retrograde military equipment along the Northern Distribution Network, and the impact on Coalition Support Funds that support ground transportation of supplies and retrograde of equipment through Pakistan.

Gen. Mark Welsh, the Air Force Chief of Staff wrote:

The FY 14 NDAA contains critical authorities that enable us to protect the American people while keeping our promise to our active duty, Guard, Reserve, and civilian airmen. If this important legislation is not enacted, I worry about significant impacts to Air Force operations that could jeopardize the missions we are tasked to perform. . . . Simply put, we cannot operate effectively without your help and without the direction that the NDAA provides.

Gen. Frank Grass, the Chief of the National Guard Bureau, told us:

Failure to enact an NDAA would break faith with our Army and Air Guardsmen by not re-authorizing special pay and bonuses. Also, authorities contained in the NDAA are crucial to maintaining the training, equipment, and opportunities necessary for the National Guard to remain an operational force ready to respond to domestic and overseas contingencies.

I ask unanimous consent that these letters be printed in full in the RECORD.

CHAIRMAN OF THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF,
Washington, DC, December 9, 2013.

Hon. HARRY REID,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MAJORITY LEADER: As we enter the final weeks of December, I write to urge you to complete the National Defense Authorization Act this year. The authorities contained therein are critical to the Nation's defense and urgently needed to ensure we all keep faith with the men and women, military and civilian, selflessly serving in our Armed Forces. Allowing the Bill to slip to January adds yet more uncertainty to the force and further complicates the duty of our commanders who face shifting global threats. I also fear that delay may put the entire Bill at risk, protracting this uncertainty and impacting our global influence. For your reference, enclosed is a list summarizing expiring authorities.

I deeply appreciate congressional efforts to achieve a budget deal and subsequent appropriations. Your efforts to provide the Joint Chiefs the Time, Certainty, and Flexibility in both our budget and authorities will help ensure we keep our Nation safe from coercion.

I appreciate your continued concern for and support of our men and women in uniform.

Sincerely,

MARTIN E. DEMPSEY,
General, U.S. Army.

UNITED STATES ARMY,
THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
December 10, 2013.

Hon. HARRY REID
Senate Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR LEADER REID: Today, your Army has close to 70,000 Soldiers deployed around the world with nearly 40,000 of those brave men and women in combat in Afghanistan and several thousand more in hazardous duty postings such as the Persian Gulf and Horn of Africa. With many of the authorizations for their support and the support to their families set to expire later this month, I believe it is imperative that the Congress pass the National Defense Authorizations Act this December. Our Soldiers and their families require the many authorities that your bill, when passed, will provide for them to accomplish their missions overseas and here at home. For an Army still very much at war, it is vital that the Congress not allow these critical defense authorizations to lapse.

The Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff has laid out the impacts of a lapse in defense authorizations on our Combatant Commanders' operations and on deployed troops. The impacts of not having a defense authorization bill passed in this calendar year will have a significant impact at home as well. From authorities that help us prevent and respond to sexual assault, restore readiness, allow for continuous work in our industrial base, and start important military construction projects, this NDAA is critical to your Soldiers, their Families, and the numerous local communities that support our installations. As a nation, we cannot afford to allow those authorities to lapse and delay the implementation of new authorities designed to make our National defense stronger and more effective.

With great respect, I urge you to find a way to work with the House in the days remaining prior to the Holiday Recess and pass the NDAA. Given these authorities, I look forward to returning to Congress in the early spring with Secretary McHugh and testifying on the Army's Posture.

Thank you for your continued support of our Army, Soldiers, Civilians, and Veterans.

Sincerely,

RAYMOND T. ODIERNO,
General, United States Army.

CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS,
December 12, 2013.

Hon. HARRY REID,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR REID: I am writing to request the expeditious passage of the FY14 National Defense Authorization Act.

Early in my tenure as Chief of Naval Operations, I established three tenets for the Navy: "Warfighting First," "Operate Forward," and "Be Ready." In support of these three tenets, I ask that you give every consideration to completing the FY14 NDAA before the end of the year. Passage of the bill will give me the authorities needed to support our Sailors through special pays, allowances, and enlistment and retention bonuses. Sailor readiness is the foundation of Fleet readiness. Support to our Civilians, Sailors, and their Families is central to Sailor readiness. Deferring the NDAA into calendar year 2014 would mean critical authorities expire, which would exacerbate my readiness challenge and jeopardize our commitment to our service men and women.

Thank you in advance for your efforts and persistence in passing the FY14 defense authorization bill as soon as feasible.

JONATHAN W. GREENERT.

DECEMBER 9, 2013.

DEAR LEADER REID: I am writing you to express my strongest support for the passage of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) prior to the end of this year. This year's NDAA contains authorities critical to our Nation's defense that enable us to protect the American people while keeping our promises to our Marines, Sailors and Civilian Marines. I believe that passage of a National Defense Authorization Act prior to the end of the current calendar year is a national security imperative.

As a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, I am gravely concerned that, without timely passage of the NDAA, critical authorities will expire. Without an NDAA, landmark legislation transforming the Uniform Code of Military Justice and improving the support provided to victims of sexual assault will be lost. I am also concerned about the adverse impact on logistical support for Coalition forces in Afghanistan, our ability to retrograde military equipment along the Northern Distribution Network, and the impact on Coalition Support Funds that support ground transportation of supplies and retrograde of equipment through Pakistan.

As the Commandant of the Marine Corps, I am concerned that failure to pass an NDAA will break faith with our Marines, Sailors and Civilian Marines on authorizations for their pay and benefits. Also, hard-won gains on the Twenty-nine Palms land expansion Senator Feinstein worked so hard over the past seven years to accomplish will be threatened.

I thank you for your willingness to reach across the aisle in a timely and creative fashion in order to pass this vital piece of legislation prior to the end of the year. Your continued support for the men and women that wear our nation's uniform will add certainty to the force and simplify the duties of commanders around the globe who are providing for our common defense.

Again, thank you for all you do to support your Marines and Sailors. I remain . . .

Semper Fidelis,

JAMES F. AMOS,
General, U.S. Marine Corps,
Commandant of the Marine Corps.

DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE,
Washington, DC, December 12, 2013.

Hon. HARRY REID,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR LEADER REID: I write to urge Congress to pass the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2014 (FY14 NDAA) prior to the end of this calendar year. The FY14 NDAA contains critical authorities that enable us to protect the American people while keeping promises to our active duty, Guard, Reserve, and civilian Airmen. If this important legislation is not enacted, I worry about significant impacts to Air Force operations that could jeopardize the missions we are tasked to perform.

In addition to serious operational impacts, I am concerned that failure to pass an NDAA, would break faith with Airmen as authorizations for pay and benefits expire. As you know, today's Air Force faces many challenges, and we depend on the NDAA to provide policy direction on a variety of matters, ranging from sexual assault prevention and response to adjusting force structure and manpower to meet future threats, all while complying with budget constraints. Simply put, we cannot operate effectively without your help and without the direction that the NDAA provides.

Thank you for your attention to our concerns and for considering action on the FY14 NDAA before this congressional session comes to a close. We are grateful for your continued support for all of the men and women who wear our Nation's uniform.

Sincerely,

MARK A. WELSH, III,
General, USAF, Chief of Staff.

NATIONAL GUARD BUREAU,
DEFENSE PENTAGON,
Washington, DC.

Hon. HARRY REID,
Majority Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. MAJORITY LEADER: I write to you to urge completion of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA). I understand you have received similar letters from the Army and Air Force Chiefs of Staff, highlighting the impact a lapse of authorization would have on federalized National Guardsmen. As Chief of the National Guard Bureau, I want to echo these sentiments as well as point out the harmful effects on non-federalized National Guardsmen, military technicians, and their families. Specifically, failure to enact an NDAA would break faith with our Army and Air Guardsmen by not re-authorizing special pay and bonuses. Also, authorities contained in the NDAA are crucial to maintaining the training, equipment, and opportunities necessary for the National Guard to remain an operational force ready to respond to domestic and overseas contingencies.

I truly appreciate your efforts to pass an NDAA and Appropriations Bill that support and enable our military to defend our Nation and keep it safe. Thank you for your continued support of all National Guardsmen, civilians, and their families.

Sincerely,

FRANK J. GRASS,
*General, U.S. Army, Chief,
National Guard Bureau.*

Mr. LEVIN. Finally, we have managed to pass a national defense authorization bill for 52 straight years, including a number of recent years when we were unable to pass a bill in the Senate, and therefore unable to go to a traditional conference. That is not best way to proceed. I think we all acknowledge that.

Our troops, their families, and our Nation's security, deserve a defense bill, and what we are offering to the Senate is the only practical way to get a bill passed and enacted.

Again, before I yield the floor, I wish to thank Senator INHOFE and his staff who have joined so closely with myself and all of the members of the Armed Services Committee and our staff to make it possible to get, as I said before, this close to the finish line.

I am confident we are going to cross that finish line because of the hard work of our members. I want to especially point out our subcommittee chairs and the ranking members as well as all of the members of the Armed Services Committee, including Senator BLUMENTHAL, who at this moment is presiding over the Senate and has personally played such an important role in getting us to where we are.

With that, and again with my thanks to Senator INHOFE, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, first, I wish to say the same thing. It sounds as though it is all rehearsed, but it is not. It is actually a reality that I have always felt I could call and talk to the chairman about things we might not have in common—although I can only remember one issue where we were on opposite sides, but we have our reasons for being on opposite sides. Unless we work those out, then between John Bonsell and Peter, it is always a joy to be able to call and know I am reaching the top and we are going to be able to come up with a decision.

I talked to a lot of the Republicans who voted against this, and I want the chairman to be aware of this. I think almost all of them who voted against it voted that way for one reason; that is, the process. They wanted to have amendments. They are entitled to amendments. I think we said that over the last 10 years we have averaged 9 days of debate on this most significant bill each year. That is an average. We have had about 100 amendments on average. So that is something both the chairman and I agree should have happened, but it just didn't happen. We can't really blame one side more than the other.

Then, of course, when the nuclear option came, that got things pretty hostile here, and unfortunately what suffered was our bill.

I feel strongly that we have a good bill. In fact, a lot of people don't know how this process works when we cannot get a bill through the House and/or the Senate to make it a reality, and I had to go through this one year when I was on the House Armed Services Committee. Then they had the big four; that is, the chairman and the ranking member of the Senate and the chairman and the ranking member of the House, get together and put this together. That may not be the process—in fact, it is not the process we wanted—but the choice became, do we have a bill or do we not have a bill, and we have gotten down to that choice.

What I tried to do, and I failed—I am embarrassed to say I failed with many of our Republicans in explaining to them what would happen if we don't have a bill. I started writing what the chairman talked about that is in this bill, and I couldn't keep up. He was too fast. But I would like to mention a couple of things that I think perhaps were not mentioned.

Of course, we did cover Gitmo, and I look at it just a little bit differently than the chairman does. I like the restoration of the 1-year prohibition on the transferring of the detainees to the United States. That was a 12-month provision we had last time that we tried to get in, and we actually addressed this in our bill. But in this bill—the substitute bill we just voted on—I think it is very important and something I feel very strongly about.

On the sexual assault, we had both Senators McCASKILL and GILLIBRAND, and I recall both of them saying: Well, this isn't everything I wanted. But they both thought it sure was a lot better than not having a bill. So I think we have done a good job there.

I always pick out one area that shows how much this would cost. If we look at the CVN-78—75 percent finished right now, $12 billion spent on it now—and if we didn't have this bill, I am sure we would try to do something, but work would stop, and people would be laid off. It would have then cost a lot more to wind things up and get back into it. When I say "a lot more," we are talking about millions of dollars more. So that is one of the great victories we have.

The one aspect so many of my constituents are concerned about that I think needs to be called to everyone's attention that is in this bill is the U.N. Arms Trade Treaty. I remember back when we had the bill that didn't ultimately pass, but we had an all-night session, and at 5 o'clock in the morning I passed my amendment that would preclude us from getting involved in that treaty. This was after our Secretary of State had already signed this treaty. We had 53 votes. We had all the Republicans and six of the Democrats vote in favor of that. That didn't pass, but it is very important that we address that, not just to protect Second Amendment rights but also to protect our ability to help our allies without having to go through the United Nations. And we have that provision in here, which is very significant.

On the BRAC, BRAC is controversial. I was opposed to the last BRAC round. My feeling at that time was that we were getting the force structure down artificially low, and I didn't feel comfortable bringing down the infrastructure to meet that because I was hoping we would be able to—that is the same reason I would not want to have a BRAC round right now. We have never been in such a critical fiscal condition in supporting our military as we are today.

One thing that is certain about BRAC rounds is that we can debate about how much ultimately they will save, but everybody knows what it costs in the first 5 years, and these are the first 5 years that we really can't afford it, particularly the first year.

The last thing I would mention is something I felt more strongly about than I think most of the rest of them did, and that is how much we have spent on these drop-in fuels, the biofuels, and we have language here that would say we would not do it unless they are cost-competitive. That is a huge issue to me personally.

The last two I would like to mention—people say in my conference, a lot of them are saying: Well, what is going to happen on December 31 if we don't pass the bill? I have a long list of expirations here that I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD. I will only mention three of them. One is on the aviation officer retention bonus.

I think we all know and most of us believe that we made a mistake in April when we shut down some of our squadrons and about a third of our fighter squadrons for a period of about 3 months. General Walsh presented a very persuasive case that it costs a lot more to get them back to current, as we started to do in July, than the money that was saved during the time they were down. I think we lost a lot of aviators at that time because they were grounded, they weren't flying, and they just decided they would go into the private sector.

If we take away the aviation officer retention bonus, that is going to accelerate the lost number of people who would otherwise stay in the military. That would have gone away on the 31st of December. I don't know how many of the aviators we would lose, but I do know this: It is a $25,000 bonus, and the difference between retraining and retraining is huge. We can retain them, if the bonus would influence them, for $25,000, but retraining, to get to the optimum—the first level being the F-22—is about $7.5 million, but there is another $9 million to get to the top proficiency. That means $17 million as opposed to $25,000. So I think we need to in the future always keep track of retraining and retaining.

The health care professional bonus would end on December 31. Why is that important? Because a lot of these people who are taking care of our wounded warriors—not just at the hospitals but also after they leave—have special pay to take care of our wounded warriors, those who have made the sacrifices, and that would have ended on December 31.

The reenlistment bonus for Active members would also end. I remember from my military days that when people were getting ready to leave, they looked at the bonus, and that is there to encourage them to stay. So it is not just aviators; it is the ground guys and gals too.

So we have done a lot. I really appreciate that opportunity.

The last thing I will say—and I will ask my staff to put up the picture—this is my appeal to the minority leader and the majority leader. We could play the game and extend this and be here until midnight, I guess, on Thursday night. It happens that tomorrow is my 54th wedding anniversary, and I would really like to ask both the majority and the minority if we couldn't yield back a little bit of time. We know we are going to have the votes for this. I would sure like help. Those 20 kids and grandkids are waiting for me for a big dinner on our 54th wedding anniversary tomorrow night. So have mercy, give us a break, and let's try to get this voted on and go home. And Merry Christmas to everybody.

Mr. INHOFE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I surely join Senator INHOFE in the plea that his time and much of the time between now and the 30-hour end point be yielded back. Somehow or other, I hope our leaders can manage that for not just Senator INHOFE's 54th wedding anniversary—I thought I was a heroic figure; my wife is more heroic than I—because we have been married 52 years.

Mr. INHOFE. Oh, you will make it.

Mr. LEVIN. She is the hero. But in any event, I surely join in that request.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a full list of our minority and majority staff who have given so much of themselves and their families be printed in the RECORD, including Peter Levine, John Bonsell, and then all of the other staff members, both the majority and minority staff.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Peter K. Levine, Staff Director; John A. Bonsell, Minority Staff Director; Daniel C. Adams, Minority Associate Counsel; Adam J. Barker, Professional Staff Member; Steven M. Soofer, Professional Staff Member; William K. Sutey, Professional Staff Member; Barry C. Walker, Security Officer.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I again thank all of the members of our committee and staff who worked—I don't know how to describe the effort that every year is put into our authorization bill. It is a round number—52, maybe now 53 years. It is a big number. It doesn't say what each year—each month of every year—our staffs put into the annual authorization bill. It is an extraordinary effort that they make. Senator INHOFE and our colleagues and I watch them really with amazement because of what they give up to accomplish this. We are not quite there yet. We have to have a final passage vote. I hope it comes a lot earlier than late tomorrow.

ENERGY SAVINGS PERFORMANCE CONTRACTING

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, the Department of Defense is the largest single consumer of facilities energy in the Nation and spends more than $4 billion a year to power military installations. Energy management is very important to DoD's mission, both as a matter of conservation and the proper stewardship of funds provided by Congress.

In recent years, the Department of Defense has made significant progress in reducing energy use on military installations. In fiscal year 2012, the Department achieved a 17.7 percent reduction in energy use from the fiscal year 2003 baseline established by law in the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007. In addition to direct investment, the Department's use of energy savings performance contracting and utility energy savings contracting has historically played an important role in the achievement of the Department's facility energy management objectives. Energy Savings Performance Contracts, commonly known as ESPCs, provide private sector financing for energy improvements at government facilities, with that investment paid back over time from the agency's utility bill savings. As part of a broad administration effort established in 2011 to improve Federal energy efficiency, the Department has committed to award $1.2 billion in performance-based contracts by the end of 2013.

I would pose a question to my colleague, the ranking member of the full committee and a manager of the bill, Senator INHOFE, who has long been a supporter of performance contracting, about this matter and whether he believes the Department can do more.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Hampshire, the chair of the Subcommittee on Readiness and Management Support, for her question. I am a strong supporter of energy performance contracts that provide maximum savings for the Federal Government. It is my understanding that the components of the Department of Defense have identified additional opportunities for energy conservation and energy demand management that could benefit from performance contracting. However, in order to maximize taxpayer savings, it is vital that DoD contract for those projects that provide the greatest return on investment as opposed to directing the use of certain mandated energy sources without an assessment of relative costs over the life cycle of the project. I join with the Senator from New Hampshire to strongly encourage the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the military departments to increase the use and streamline the administration of energy savings performance and utility energy savings contracting vehicles that will incorporate the most efficient and effective energy systems in order to maximize the reduction of operational costs, to conserve energy resources, and to improve the efficiency of building systems. I hope my colleague will join with me as part of our oversight responsibilities for the committee that we ensure energy performance contracts carried out by the Department of Defense meet the intent of the President's executive order of December 2011 to maximize cost reductions for the Federal Government by promoting projects to offer the greatest return on investment.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Oklahoma and I look forward to working with him to improve DoD's management practices in this area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I too wish to congratulate the Senator from Oklahoma and Kay for their 54th wedding anniversary. It is quite a landmark for an outstanding couple. I hope they get to celebrate on their day. I think that probably, if we knew the final vote on this was going to be the end of the whole process before Christmas, it probably would include time yielded back. But if there are going to be a whole bunch of things thrown in that really have relatively little importance before the end of the year, the Senator probably won't get his wish. So I am hoping we can end it with this bill.

I rise to express my disappointment that this National Defense Authorization Act on which we will soon be having a final vote is the product of another deal instead of the result of discussion, debate, and amendment process on the floor. Once again, the Senate has failed to do its job. The Senate majority leader has blocked all but two amendments to this NDAA from consideration, and those were to prevent any other amendments from happening. That is not right. That is not the way we used to do it. If we want to know what is wrong with the Senate and why people of all political persuasions are upset with Congress, that is a big part of the answer right there—no amendments allowed.

Here we are at the end of the year—this didn't have to come at the end of the year. In fact, I never remember us debating it this late in the year.

Incidentally, this is the only committee that gets a bill every year. The other committees have to fight for some time and hopefully have a persuasive enough bill to get it. But every year I have been here, we have debated this National Defense Authorization Act, and it is important.

There are two primary things we are charged with, and one is spending for the United States and the other is national defense. And this is about the national defense. It shouldn't be crowded into 30 hours or even 1 week. There ought to be the ability to express what we think is important dealing with national defense, and we are not being allowed to do that.

This is an important bill for our country. There are a lot of important issues in it that we need to discuss. We haven't considered issues relating to our nuclear deterrent, to privacy concerns related to the National Security Administration, to detention of U.S. citizens, and the need to address sexual assault in the military, or a number of other important issues. In the past, we have spent multiple weeks on the Defense bill and considered dozens of amendments. That is what we should be doing this year too.

I understand we have come up against this December 31 deadline and how critical that is. That should not have happened. Our national security needs to be fully debated, and it needs to be debated by the whole Senate.

Every voice needs to be heard. That means every constituent out there whom we represent has to have at least an opportunity to have their interests reflected in this national bill. We all have some military in our States, and it is very important. That is how it is supposed to happen, and that is the way the Senate does its best work.

One of the things that have been holding it up, of course, are the nominations. Most of those nominations did not have urgency to them. They could have been done next year without hurting the United States at all—not the case with the National Defense Authorization Act. So we do not have priorities on what we are debating around here, and then we have limits because of the timeframe. It is not right.

One of those important issues we are skipping over is the nuclear deterrent. I offered several amendments on this issue because I believe the administration is playing a dangerous game with national security. The solution I proposed in my amendment was simple and straightforward. It would have ensured that American citizens and our allies would not be harmed by this administration's bad policy decisions—both today and for years to come—by ensuring that any further reductions in our nuclear arsenal could not be done by the administration unilaterally.

As background, here in the Senate I have the honor of representing the city of Cheyenne, WY, which is the home of F.E. Warren Air Force Base and the 90th ICBM Missile Wing. Those who proudly serve there have an awesome responsibility and a history of doing excellent work. We have entrusted the most powerful of our weaponry to the best, to the most capable of managing these weapons in a thoroughly professional and reliable manner. Every day, the top-notch men and women who are stationed at F.E. Warren work together to maintain the world's most powerful military force, our ICBMs. Seven days a week, 24 hours a day, they stand guard to ensure our safety and our freedom. They maintain a constant vigil from which they can never stand down because their mission is that critical. In a very real sense, that is why each one of us is able to sleep well at night. Moms and dads and grandpas and grandmas all across America know that when they tuck their kids in at night, someone is on duty and will continue to be watching through the lonely hours of the night to make sure their little ones are safe and secure.

Unfortunately, there are those in the administration who take the contributions of our military for granted. They do not have the sense of history that is needed to fully appreciate why these weapons were designed and put into operation in the first place. They do not see how much they are needed today and will still be needed tomorrow to ensure our future. They do not fully appreciate the key role they have played in the past either. They seem to think that nuclear weapons are part of a bygone era, a relic of the past that has not been needed since the Cold War ended.

The adoption of such a position is dangerous because it takes our position of strength for granted. What they fail to understand is the power of this deterrent and how it has kept us safe for decades. In the past, any nation that gave even a casual thought to threatening us or trying to do us harm had to quickly shelve those plans when the realization of what they would be up against was made clear. That is, after all, the point of having these weapons. That is one of the reasons why they are necessary. They have served us well ever since they were first deployed.

The administration's views on our nuclear deterrent should not come as a surprise to any of us who have watched the development of these ideas when they were first offered for consideration. We have seen President Obama promise to do all he can to reduce our nuclear arsenal—step by step. First, he rammed the New START treaty through the Senate by promising commitments that he ultimately did not keep. One of those was the promise to modernize our nuclear force, which we are still waiting on. I voted against ratification of the New START treaty because I believe maintaining a strong nuclear force is a critical part of protecting our country. It still is.

The Obama administration has stated its intention to reduce the number of deployed nuclear warheads to as few as 1,000, which would be 550 fewer than is allowed under that New START treaty. What is more, in the factsheet on the Nuclear Posture Review Implementation Study, it states that the President could go outside the formal treaty-making process and reduce our nuclear arsenal unilaterally. That has “bad idea” written all over it. It means the administration can still make drastic nuclear reductions even if Russia will not agree to do the same. Does that make any sense? Should we just bargain with ourselves? That is something which should give us all pause and encourage us to go on record as to what needs to be done to keep our people safe.

In case you think I am overreacting, last year President Obama was caught on an open microphone promising former Russian President Dmitry Medvedev that he would have more flexibility to negotiate on nuclear defense issues after his election. Those comments are still before us, and they do not exactly instill trust and confidence that the President will not choose to bypass Congress and act unilaterally on nuclear reductions.

All we have to do is look around the world to see why we should be concerned. Everywhere we look, nations are looking to increase, not decrease, their weaponry. In fact, as the President makes plans for reducing our own nuclear arsenal, it appears Russia and China are looking for ways to modernize and update their own arsenals.

These are dangerous weapons, and we need to be certain we do everything we can to ensure that they continue to be fully monitored. They must never be used. But it seems to me that the best way to make certain they are never used is to be certain that no one would ever dare to think of using them against us or our allies.

The concerns I have that some other country might use these weapons first are increased, not decreased, when I see the administration sending signals that they might not wait for everyone to disarm; they might do it on their own first. It would be like taking your own team off the field and allowing the other team to score at will. Relying on the good will of the opponent rarely works, and it is clearly not a good strategy.

One final point. We are not the only ones who are relying on our nuclear arsenal for our safety and security. There are other countries that rely on the United States for their national security. If we make it clear that we are dropping out of this vital source of our strength as a nation, this could encourage other countries to increase their own nuclear capability because they will suspect that they can no longer rely on us. Increasing the number of nations that have a nuclear capability is clearly something we dare not encourage.

Simply put, this is exactly what my amendment was trying to stop. It would have ensured that any further reductions in our nuclear arsenal could not be done on a unilateral basis by the President alone. Instead, any changes would have to follow the application of the treaty system, which would give the Senate an opportunity to weigh in on this matter again when a proposal in the form of a treaty is brought before us for our consideration.

Just as ridiculous, the President threatened a veto if the amendment were in the bill. Now, unfortunately, due to the majority leader's actions, we are not going to be able to debate this and other important issues like I mentioned before—the privacy issue at the National Security Agency, the NSA listening in on telephone calls; the detention of U.S. citizens; addressing sexual assault in the military; and a number of others.

For all of these reasons, I cannot support moving forward on the Defense bill. I hope that on our next Defense authorization bill we will all recognize the importance of being allowed to fully debate these issues, so we will not wait until the end of the year when there is this looming deadline regarding bonuses, so our men and women in uniform can continue to fulfill their mission of keeping our Nation safe, secure, and free, knowing what their future is.

Something as important as the Defense authorization bill must not be drafted or taken up for a vote until it has made it through the whole legislative process. The legislative process was created for a reason, and we do ourselves and our constituents and those who serve in our Armed Forces a disservice when we fail to make full use of it. The bill has not made it through each step of the process. In my opinion, that is a fatal flaw. We can do better. We need to do better. We better do better in the future.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHATZ. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE BUDGET

Mr. SCHATZ. The budget agreement that we passed is an important step forward for our country and for our government. I know Chairman PATTY MURRAY worked tremendously hard to get to a conference in the first place and to reach this agreement with the House. I commend Chairman MURRAY for all of her work.

The U.S. Government has been lurching from crisis to manufactured crisis and using short-term stopgaps to fund the government. The threat of a shutdown and the lack of uncertainty has hurt our economy and has eroded the American people's confidence in our ability to solve problems.

It is our job to produce a budget and to figure out a way to work together and not shut the government down. That is what the people expect of responsible leaders in a divided government.

This budget agreement is the way to move forward. It ends the reckless threats of government shutdown and lays a clear path to end sequestration.

The sequester hit my home State of Hawaii very hard. The across-the-board arbitrary cuts from sequester have been devastating for our middle-class families and to our economy.

I wish to read a letter that I received from a professor at the University of Hawaii at Manoa in September.

He wrote:

I was contacted today, as I often am, by a student wanting to join our graduate program in the Department of Geology and Geophysics.

Unfortunately, I had to tell this student that funding for accepting new students is low right now, which may make it impossible for me to accept him as a graduate student, despite his excellent qualifications.

This exchange reminded me that one source of the problem is the budget cuts to NSF (and other science funding agencies) that are the result of sequestration. The current situation is having the following impacts, which are happening right now at research centers nationwide, including UH Manoa:

Many scientific workers are being laid off or are not being hired—this includes individuals in Honolulu.

Research groups are being forced to cut infrastructure that took decades to build.

Some scientific discoveries that could help our society are not being made.

Some bright young students are not being given opportunities to advance their scientific careers.

I think that this last point is the saddest result because it negatively impacts the hopes and dreams of many young people.

Furthermore, these students are the future of our scientific workforce—people that will be leading us toward the innovation and problem-solving that is crucial for our country's future.

This professor urged me and this Congress to do everything that we can to roll back the sequester. That is one of the many reasons why I supported the budget today.

Sequestration caused Federal workers to be furloughed or laid off throughout Hawaii. Sequestration hurt our national defense, U.S. competitiveness, and harmed education programs.

Head Start in Hawaii had to cut children from its programs this year. This early education program is critical for a young child's success later in life. Some of these kids and parents don't have other options without Head Start.

Without this budget agreement, there would have been an additional $20 billion cut to our defense programs hitting next month. Those defense cuts are going to disproportionately hurt my home State of Hawaii. Without this budget agreement, 25,000 Federal civilian workers in Hawaii could be furloughed or laid off.

Hawaii can't afford that. I voted for this budget to prevent those cuts.

The bipartisan budget agreement finally provides relief from the sequester and a path forward to get our economy on the right track. Most importantly, the budget protects Social Security and Medicare benefits.

Although this budget is the right choice for many reasons, we know it is not perfect. I do believe we need to work together to improve parts of it.

I find it unacceptable and inexplicable that the House of Representatives left town for the holidays without extending long-term unemployment benefits, and I know we are working on making it a priority as soon as we return in January.

In addition, Senator SHAHEEN has introduced legislation—which I am proud to support and cosponsor—to protect military retirees from the cost-of-living pay adjustment. The cost-of-living pay adjustment won't take effect until January of 2015, which means that we have time to fix this issue, but we must fix this issue.

This legislation that I am cosponsoring with Senator SHAHEEN will fully pay for the change by closing a loophole that some companies are using to avoid paying U.S. taxes with offshore tax havens. This is a commonsense fix that I believe we can get bipartisan support for. We need a long-term budget, but not at the expense of our military retirees.

We can replace the money raised by closing this tax loophole that some companies are abusing. We have time to fix this issue, and we have to do so before 2015. But now is the time to move forward, to protect jobs, and to give our country some economic certainty.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

VA EXPIRING AUTHORITIES EXTENSION ACT

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 1402, which was received from the House and is at the desk.

A bill (H.R. 1402) to amend title 38, United States Code, to extend certain expiring provisions of law, and further purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read three times and passed and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The bill (H.R. 1402) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each and, further, that the time count postcloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise today to address the dire national security situation and the responsibility of this body to pass a national defense authorization bill this year.

Congress has passed this legislation for each of the last 51 years, always with broad bipartisan support. This year should be no different. Our service men and women are deployed around the globe in defense of our Nation. They put themselves in harm's way to further the American principles of freedom and democracy, yet we have failed to provide these men and women and our senior military leaders the fiscal certainty and legal authorities they need to complete their vital missions.

Instead, we have a Senate majority intent on fundamentally altering the way the Senate conducts business by pushing through bills without a full and open process. This is not the way the Senate was designed to function.

This year's National Defense Authorization Act was reported out of the Senate Armed Services Committee on June 20 of this year. Since that time it has been delayed time and again by the Senate majority leader as our Defense leaders struggle to implement our national security strategy. General Dempsey recently transmitted to congressional leadership an itemized list of 26 authorities that will expire at the end of this year or shortly thereafter. We are not talking about legislating ancillary programs or nonessential functions, we are talking about military special pay and bonuses for deployed servicemembers, funds to transition security responsibilities to our Afghan partners, and critical counterinsurgency programs in the Middle East, as well as funding for our intelligence community.

While I support the underlying bill, I am deeply disappointed with the process that got us to this point and thus why I did not vote to invoke cloture. Frankly, I had several amendments I would like to have added to this bill addressing such issues as a technical correction giving Reservists and National Guardsmen proper credit toward retirement for time spent deployed, and an important land transfer of Camp Merrill in Georgia between the Army and the U.S. Forest Service.

I have seen many changes during my years in the Senate, but among those is a disturbing trend regarding the NDAA. We seem to be operating on the premise of fewer, faster, and later. By fewer, I mean fewer amendments. All Senators deserve the opportunity to amend this important piece of legislation. The 20-year average is 140 amendments per year. Last year we were only able to pass 106 amendments. This year we debated one.

As we have seen time and time again, the majority uses the amendment tree to shut down debate and move the bill quicker through the Senate. My colleagues and I have filed over 500 amendments to this year's NDAA. Through hard work and bipartisan support, the two Armed Services Committee staffs have striven to accommodate the concerns of the Senate. But even so, there are pressing issues that require full and deliberative debate in the Senate. These include military sexual assault, counterterrorism and detention policy, and sanctions against those regimes that would do America harm, including Iran.

By faster, I mean the bill spends less time on the Senate floor. The 20-year average is over 9 days, with a maximum of 19 days for the fiscal year 2008 bill. The 1 day we spent on this bill in November is insufficient time to debate the critical security issues confronting our Nation.

The Senate majority has gone to great lengths to keep the bill off the floor. When they could no longer avoid it, they have compressed the timeline for consideration or recommitted it to the Armed Services Committee. This is unprecedented and it is totally unacceptable.

By later, I mean a lack of urgency to take up the bill after committee action. Looking back over the last 40 years, the Senate has gone from passing the NDAA consistently before August to later and later in the year. Last year, it was December. This year we are running up against the end of the year.

I am deeply disappointed at the recent turn of events in the Senate. Under the guise of streamlining the legislative process, the Senate majority has effectively blocked critical legislative priorities such as the National Defense Authorization Act. I urge my Senate colleagues on both sides of the aisle to work together to discharge the fundamental duties our constituents, servicemembers, and veterans demand of us. We should dispose of the fewer, faster, and later mentality and return Congress to regular order.

Leadership matters. No one knows this better than our men and women in uniform. The Constitution of the United States tasks us with providing for the common defense. I fear we have failed in our constitutional obligation, and this failure is a failure of leadership, plain and simple.

With that being said, I want to pay a particular compliment to Chairman LEVIN as well as to Ranking Member INHOFE for their leadership, which has not failed the country nor has it failed this body. They got together and produced a bill that came out of our committee in due course after a full and open debate on many critical issues, with the understanding we would have the opportunity on the floor of the Senate to file amendments, debate those amendments, and have up-or-down votes.

Chairman LEVIN has been more than accommodating throughout the process, before and after the time the bill came out of the Armed Services Committee. Likewise, Senator INHOFE has been more than accommodating in making sure Members on this side of the aisle had free and open access to the debate process. They have provided the kind of leadership we expect.

Unfortunately, the majority leader has made a decision to cram this down the throats of the Senate, and from a national security standpoint that is simply not the way this body is designed to work or should work.

I will support the passage of this bill, because I think the end product, amazingly enough, has turned out to be a pretty good product. Could it have been better? You bet. Could the process have been better? Without question. I just wish we had had the opportunity to debate the serious issues that are on the minds of a number of Members of the Senate when it comes to national security, and that we had had the opportunity to present amendments that would have made this strong bill even stronger and to provide our men and women in uniform and the leadership at the Pentagon with the tools they need to be sure we remain the world's strongest military power and that we are able to not only defend America and Americans but to provide for freedom and democracy around the world.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AFFORDABLE CARE ACT

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, I wish to engage for perhaps the next 20 or so minutes with Senator CANTWELL, who is arriving shortly. I will begin with some remarks and ask unanimous consent for us to engage in a colloquy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I am here today to talk about the health care problem in the country, because I think the fixation of this body on the health care Web site has taken our eye off the fact we have a very significant and fundamental health care problem.

This graph represents how much we spend on health care as a country. It begins back here in 1960. I was 5 years old in 1960. So this is a lifetime: 50-some years, $27.4 billion. That is what we spent on health care. Now here we are. This is up to 2011, and $2.7 trillion is what we spend on health care. It is 100 times as much in 50 years. Granted, there are more Americans but not 100 times as many.

This has been an explosive cost growth curve. When we were trying to pass the health care bill, that is what we were looking at for costs. It is a big competitive problem for our country.

This is a really interesting graph. I wish every time anybody talked about health care they would take 1 minute and look at this graph. I will explain briefly what it is.

This column is the up access and measures life expectancy in years, country by country, 65 to 85, where countries fall in terms of their average life expectancy for their population, for their citizens. This along the bottom is the cost, the health spending per capita per person in that country. So if you measure it all out, what you see is a great raft of countries all through here: Japan, Great Britain, Netherlands, Switzerland, Norway, Italy, Greece. There is a whole large group of countries right here, and all of them have a life expectancy 80 or older and they all spend between $6,000 and $2,000 per person on their country's health care. Essentially the entire modernized, civilized world is in that zone, from here to here.

Guess where the United States of America is. Boom. Here. We are below them all in life expectancy. We are trailing the pack of modern industrialized nations in our life expectancy. We are competing with Chile and the Czech Republic. But Japan, Greece, Great Britain, France, Germany, Luxembourg, all manage with their health care systems to achieve longer lifespans for their people. And we are doing it at a cost of about $8,500 per person per year.

To give a comparison, here are Switzerland and Norway. They are the other two most expensive countries in the world per capita on health care spending, and they are at about $5,700 per year. If we could bring our per capita health care spending in this country down to the most expensive countries in the world, if we could compete head to head with the most expensive countries in the world, we would save more than $1 trillion a year.

This is an interesting graph because it shows basically all the modern industrialized nations here, and it shows us here as a way outlier. It is a big deal for us to be an outlier here, because it means we blow about $1 trillion a year in wasteful and unnecessary health care which could be building infrastructure, solving problems, reducing the deficit, and could be doing other work. Instead, we spend it on a health care system which doesn't produce good health care results—at least not measured by life expectancy, which is a pretty good proxy.

There is a huge $1 trillion a year cost to our society in being that bad of an outlier. The cost is also measured in lost lives and lost years of life, because we are averaging 77 years and these countries are averaging 82 years of life.

We have a real problem on our hands, and obsessing about a Web site is a complete distraction from getting after this problem—5 years off every human's life in this country and $1 trillion a year. That is worth paying attention to.

The health care changes we brought are actually making a difference. Here are some interesting graphs. Each one is a projection done by the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office of what health care costs are going to look like in the future, and what you see is a progression. They did this graph in August of 2010. This was where they projected health care spending would go when they projected in August of 2010 for this period, from 2014 onward to the next decade. A year later they went back and they projected again, and they projected actually costs would be lower. Then they came back in August of 2012 and they did another projection, and their projection showed that these anticipated costs went down again, every year, lower and lower.

Here is the big one. In May of this year, the Congressional Budget Office went back and redid its projections for Medicare and Medicaid spending from 2014 to 2023. Look how far below what they had projected 1 year ago, 2 years ago, and 3 years ago the current projection. That is a saving of about $1.2 trillion in that decade.

That is a long way from $1 trillion a year we could be saving if we just got back to where we were on this graph, if we got back from here to where Switzerland and Norway, the most expensive countries in the world, are. That is $1 trillion over 1 year. This is $1.2 trillion over 10 years, but it is still a big change and it is still moving in the right direction. So we shouldn't be too quick to condemn ObamaCare when that kind of savings is already being projected.

The last slide I will show before I go to Senator CANTWELL, who has been good enough to join us, is this one. Why might it be that those costs went down so far in May of 2013? Why might it be that graph of projected costs keeps going down? It is because of changes in what is going on in the health care system.

This is one good example. This shows the hospital readmission rate from January of 2007 until August of 2013. This is how often somebody was discharged from the hospital, went home, and then within 30 days had to come back and be readmitted.

That could potentially be for a completely new reason, but usually it is because the discharge planning wasn't done well enough and there was a bad handoff between the hospital and the primary care physician or the nursing home. What we found is you could make that transition much better for patients. When you do, guess what. They don't get sent back to the hospital. When they don't get sent back to the hospital, you save money.

That is just one way the kind of huge $1.2 trillion over 10-year savings CBO has already projected could be taking place, but this is clearly a part of it. It is improving the quality of care so people aren't going back into the hospital, aren't going to the emergency room, and you avoid that cost at all by having handled the patient better, by having given them better treatment and better care.

It is pretty astounding. In 2007, right through here until the end of 2011, it was a pretty steady readmission rate. Then when we changed the signal to the hospitals and cut their payment for readmissions, boom, down it fell. That represents a very significant savings in the system. And in the personal lives of those people and their families not having to go back to the hospital, that is a pretty big plus too.

It was Senator CANTWELL's idea that we should come down today and talk a little bit about the delivery system reform side of the health care discussion. I got started a little bit before she could get here, but my wonderful colleague now has arrived, so let me yield the floor to her. I will put this graph back because I want to leave this here for whenever the camera swings my way. I want people to see this graph. It is inexcusable that all of these competitive industrialized nations of ours should be able to deliver universal high-quality health care for what would be a $1 trillion a year savings if we could simply match them, and they produce a longer life expectancy for their people and we are stuck competing for life expectancy with Chile and the Czech Republic. Come on. We can do a lot better than that, and that should be the ball we have our eye on rather than obsessing about the ObamaCare Web site.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I come to the floor to join my colleague from Rhode Island. I applaud him for his diligence, making sure this debate happened today, and for his leadership on this issue. It might sound kind of wonky to say there is a group of Senators that have a caucus called the Delivery System Reform Caucus, but we wear that banner with pride because we know that there are savings in our health care delivery system. We want to make sure that they are delivered for the American people.

While some want to talk about cutting people off of service or raising certain ages, we are focused on the fact that there are hundreds of billions of dollars of savings in the delivery system and that it is our job to improve upon them. I like to say to my office team: There is a reason why Ma Bell doesn't exist anymore. The challenge is I have so many young people, and some of them don't remember Ma Bell. But the issue is the delivery system for telecommunications changed, and look at what it unleashed—a lot of great technology.

Yes, change, but with ways to drive down costs and deliver better access. That is what we are talking about here with the health care system. My colleague from Rhode Island has had a group for more than a year that has been talking about these delivery system reforms. We are going to come out on a more frequent basis and try to have a dialog with our colleagues about why it is so important.

We have taken a small but very important step led by our senior Senator from Washington Senator MURRAY on the budget. But there is so much more we can do if we can include these delivery system reforms. So I thank Senator WHITEHOUSE, the Senator from Rhode Island, for his leadership.

I want to talk about one area today, the area of long-term care services. I authored a provision in the Affordable Care Act called the Balancing Incentive Payments Program. While that sounds in and of itself like a wonky title, Balancing Incentive Payments Program, this program is really there to promote home and community-based care over nursing home care. If you ask any senior they will say of course they would like to receive health care services in their home or in their community. No, they do not want to go to a nursing home. But the discussion has been limited on how much cheaper it is and how much better the care could be for delivery in the home as opposed to nursing home care.

According to a survey by AARP, over 90 percent of seniors age 50 or over desire to remain in their home as long as possible. We know that home and community-based care is 70 percent cheaper than nursing home care—70 percent cheaper. So for us in Washington State we thought about this long ago, and we decided that we were going to implement a system to reform our State and put more community-based care in our State and pull Medicaid patients away from nursing home care. We did that. We successfully made that transition. This chart shows you what I was just referring to, that home-based care can be as little as $1,200 a person versus the same person getting care in an institutional facility at $6,000.

We made the transition in Washington State to be predominantly a home and community-based care State. We did that with our own State dollars, our own program, and it was a transition that took place over many years. We are kind of the antithesis of what the Federal system is. It is still more weighted on a State by State basis towards nursing home care. That means people are going into nursing home care, and we are footing the bill for more expensive care at $6,000 per person when we could have services in the community that would allow them to stay in their home and get more efficient care. So in 2009, the long-term care budget overall for Medicaid accounted for 32 percent of the Medicaid expenditures or $360 billion a year. You can see that this is a very expensive area for us at the Federal level. If we could do anything to help change those numbers, we would be delivering an improvement to the system.

When we first made this transition from 1995 to 2008, the State of Washington saved $243 million from this investment. But more important, even, than the money—in an article in 2010, the Spokesman Review in Spokane ran a story called "Dying to live at home," the family of Nancy and Paul Dunham, a couple of more than 60 years, said they wanted to age at home. Because of the Medicaid funding for in-home services, they were able to stay. Mr. Dunham was able to stay in his home until the age of 83.

I am sure many of my colleagues know people who are getting on in years who prefer to stay at home. But the Balancing Incentives Program, which was in the Affordable Care Act, was the first Federal effort that we had that tried to assist States to move away from nursing home care and move towards community-based care. We put some incentives in the program. Here are the States so far that have taken up the Federal Government in the Affordable Care Act on this incentive program: New Hampshire, Maryland, Iowa, Mississippi, Missouri, Georgia, Texas, Indiana, Connecticut, Arkansas, New York, New Jersey, Louisiana, Ohio, Maine, and Illinois.

It is a diverse group of States, I might add. Some States, probably, where Governors said they did not want to support the Affordable Care Act yet are taking advantage of this provision. Some States probably are forerunners of delivery system reform and have done lots of delivery system reform and want to do more. It is a mix of States. I think we have a lot of great examples in those States and what we can do to transition away from institutional care to home and community-based care.

The program authorizes grants to States to increase access to their non-institutional long-term care services, and it supports including structural changes that help streamline the system—conflict-free case management, core standardization of assessment instruments, single entry-point systems so it is not confusing, so that the system is very streamlined. States have until September of 2015 to increase their long-term care services in the community and support expenditures of these noninstitutional-based care facilities.

We are very excited that it has had a robust uptake by these States. I am encouraged that there has been so much interest shown in changing the political orientation, if you will, of States, to how do you deal with long-term care. We know everybody is living longer. We know as baby boomers retire, it is going to be a bubble to our health care delivery system. But this is an excellent idea, a way for us to deliver better care.

What does it do? As I said in the first chart, $1,200 versus $6,000 in nursing home care. It reduces costs. Reducing those costs has to be a key focus for us.

These Medicaid recipients are people who maybe even start on Medicare but because of the extreme cost of health care at the end of life, end up spending it out, end up on Medicaid, end up being a Federal responsibility. If we can reduce those costs by driving more community-based care, it is a win-win situation.

The second thing it does is it helps improve quality. If people can stay at home and get access to the delivery system by these new requirements, making sure it is case managed and has the single point of entry and standardization of the home care system, it helps us to be efficient about the quality of care that is being delivered. Again, when you have a community-based setting, either in the home or where care is delivered through the home, there are lots of ways for us to have checks and balances on the system.

I have talked to many people who are in the nursing home industry. They will say we like the idea that we are only going to take the sickest patients. We like the idea we are only going to serve people who really need to be there as opposed to some people who may not be ready for those facilities but end up there anyway just because there are not the community efforts to support it.

Besides reducing costs and improving quality, we save money. That is why we are here today, to talk about these important ideas that save money. This is a simple one, but it is already in place. It has already started. There are many States taking us up on this offer, but it is critical that we understand and score these costs because they can show how we can save billions of dollars in our health care delivery system.

I know my colleagues, some of them on the other side of the aisle—well, all of them on the other side of the aisle—didn't support the Affordable Care Act. Take a second look at what your States are doing. Your States are supporting the legislation, at least through one provision. I think when you check, you will see that one provision is going to save your State money. It is going to give your citizens better choice in their quality of care. It is going to help us reduce our Federal costs and expenditures as well, and that is what delivery system reform is all about.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Ms. CANTWELL. Yes, I will.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Isn't it the heart of what the Senator said just a moment ago that there is an area that actually touches on a lot of health care—it is a big area—where you can do two things at once? You can save significant money for taxpayers and insurance ratepayers, and at the same time you can improve the quality of care that people receive.

So often in legislative matters it is a zero sum game. One wins so the other has to lose exactly by the same amount. This is not like that. This is a win-win situation. So there really should be energetic efforts to pursue these win-win opportunities.

Ms. CANTWELL. I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for that question. I think his charts pointed to the fact that he was articulating, the fact that everybody is arguing about the Web site. As somebody who has been involved in a software company that wrote code, what happened is very unfortunate, but writing code and fixing it is a straightforward task that can be achieved. It is a little less difficult than cleaning up oil in the gulf or something of larger environmental impact.

To me, we will get that fixed. In the meantime, there are a lot of things that have to happen, that need to change in our delivery system that are about saving costs, delivering better quality care, that we know are proven, successful answers to this question. We need to get more than just these States to take us up on this offer. We need to get CBO to actually give us a score on how much money this has the potential of saving, and then we have to figure out a way to incentivize all other States to implement this as soon as possible.

When you think about our senior population, this is what they want. They want to stay at home as long as possible. It is so much cheaper per Medicaid beneficiary to do this.

This is what we have to achieve. We hope by coming out here and educating people about the various aspects of the Affordable Care Act, the things in the delivery system reform that are on the agenda to improve access and help save costs, that this will start taking hold and we will get more people talking about these solutions. This is absolutely the direction we need to go.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. If I could ask the Senator another question in response to what she just said, not only is it a win-win, being lower cost and better quality care, but I believe the Senator said that there is actually a third win here. There is the win of lower cost, there is the win of better quality care, but for seniors there is a huge win of maintaining your independence and being able to stay at home. It is hard to put a price on that, but if you are facing the choice of having to leave your home and having to go to a more restrictive health care setting, being able to stay at home is a very big plus.

Really, it is not win-win, it is win-win-win.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Rhode Island. He is correct. There are the individuals who win. The State in this case saves Medicaid dollars, and the Federal Government saves dollars as well. But to the individual, if you ask them, this is their choice. They want to stay at home. Nobody says they want to go into nursing care.

We appreciate the nursing home care delivery aspect of health care. They deal with some of the most complex patients. But they do not need to deal with people who do not need to be there. We have to have a delivery system that helps support community-based care for long-term care. I hope that we will get more support for these ideas and that we will help figure out a way to get a score for them as well. I think that part of the misery in this whole issue of health care savings is figuring out ways to do things that are not so complex in what they are doing. Moving from nursing home care to community-based care, $1,200 versus $6,000, that is not the hard part of the equation. What is hard is to get CBO to guesstimate how much population would be affected.

We do know this. If you take the number of seniors to be affected as the baby boomer population reaches that retirement age, if you think they are going to be supported primarily by nursing home care—I think I am correct that our State has now made the shift so the majority of our people who are on Medicaid are taken care of by long-term care services in the community if they are seeking those services, versus the Federal numbers which are just the opposite. The majority of people seeking those Medicaid long-term care dollars, the average of those States is more towards nursing home care. We need to flip that. The Senator is right, it would be a win-win-win situation for all of us.

I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. Mr. President, in responding to what Senator CANTWELL just said about the Congressional Budget Office, it indeed has been frustrating and bedeviling to run up against their inability to project these savings in a way that would allow us to—what we call in Washington—score them and get budget credit for them. But even though they have that difficulty, there are some very serious organizations that project that very significant savings of the kind I have mentioned—the $1 trillion savings—are possible.

Some years ago the President's own Council of Economic Advisers estimated that we could do savings of $700 billion without affecting the quality of care in any way for the worse.

The National Institute of Medicine has made several regular projections. The most recent one is $750 billion a year. The Institute of Medicine is pretty serious folks, and they are entitled to respect when they say we can have those kinds of savings.

RAND Corporation—a lot of people know a lot about it—is a very expert organization. They have done two things. They looked at what we can save in health care, and then they looked at what we can save in health care plus an additional bit for dealing with waste and fraud. They gave ranges for the two. The midpoint of the range for savings is about $730 billion. If we add their suggestions on waste and fraud, the midpoint of their range goes to about $910 billion a year.

The Lewin Group, which is another respected think tank that looks at health care issues, wrote a piece some time ago with George Bush's former Treasury Secretary, and they said it was $1 trillion.

So is it $700 billion a year? Is it $750 billion a year? Is it somewhere between $730 and $910 billion a year depending on how you score the waste and fraud? Is it $1 trillion a year? Either way, I will take it. Those are big numbers, and wherever it falls in that range, we should be energetically fighting for it.

I will close with the request I always make in these speeches—and this is a request to the President and to his administration—and that is to inspire us and set a bold national target. Sure, CBO, OMB, and our actuarial and accounting organizations cannot predict what these savings are going to be, but, by gosh, the President can direct his administration to target a savings goal and to go after it. I think if the President were to set a hard date and dollar target for delivery system savings—a couple of years out so we have a chance to do that—that would make a big difference.

The example that I use is of President Kennedy. Back in 1961, when it looked as if we were losing the space race to the Soviet Union, President Kennedy declared that within 10 years—he put a date on it—he would put a man on the Moon and bring him back safely. He had a hard target, something specific so you would know if it was or wasn't achieved. The message was clear, the mission that was outlined was clear, and the result was a vast mobilization of private and public resources to achieve that purpose.

It is not enough to talk about bending the health care cost curve. That catchphrase should be jettisoned and discarded. We should have a hard date and dollar figure, and that should be a target the entire administration aims toward.

Had President Kennedy given that speech back in 1961 and declared as his purpose to bend the curve of space exploration, I very much doubt we would have put that man on the Moon within 10 years. It was his exercise of Presidential leadership and challenge—ahead of what the scientists knew could be done but with confidence and faith in our ability to achieve big things—that put the executive branch of government into focus so we could achieve exactly what he had directed. We can do the same with health care. We should do the same with health care. There is no downside to it because this is a win-win area, as I discussed with Senator CANTWELL.

On that note, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEINRICH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, I asked my colleague from Rhode Island to stay on the floor for a couple of minutes because I wanted to thank him for the erudite and eloquent explanation he has just given for why our focus should be so aggressively and unrelentingly on the tremendous opportunities for saving health care costs and raising health care quality at the same time. I am very proud to have joined him and other colleagues in a task force that is seeking common-sense solutions to lower the costs of health care and at the same time increase its efficiency and quality. The two go together.

The phenomenon he just discussed of reducing readmissions to hospitals once patients are discharged also means that the quality of those discharges, the rehabilitation plans and hand-offs to primary physicians, and the suffering and pain for those patients is reduced, and that is just a microcosm of one example of how this goal can be accomplished.

We are late in this year, and we have no real time remaining before the end of this year to do the kinds of reforms legislatively that will help advance this ball. But the attention we need to devote to this issue is clearly beyond this year and beyond the next year.

We are making progress, and the graphs show it, but there is so much progress to be made in extending lifespans and quality of life as well as reducing the cost of health care.

We need to make sure we seize this historic moment to show the rest of the world that we can do better and we will do better in providing health care delivery. The cause of health care delivery reform is one that cries out for a focused effort involving both branches of our government, executive and legislative, and both parties, as well as both Houses of this legislature.

The kind of focus given by Senators CANTWELL and WHITEHOUSE so penetratingly and powerfully today is the kind of focus we should maintain. I hope in the days or months ahead we will devote more attention by coming to the floor, doing events in our States, and making sure the administration is aware of our concern in meetings. I look forward to continuing that effort in the time ahead.

Again, I thank my colleague Senator WHITEHOUSE, as well as others, such as Senator SCHUMER and my colleague from Connecticut Senator MURPHY, as well as Senator CANTWELL, for their devoted efforts. I am very proud to be working with them.

I see my colleagues are on the Senate floor. It is late in the day, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, I would point out that the distinguished Senator from Delaware was on his way to speak and has graciously offered to defer for moment or two while I make my brief remarks.

U.S. DELEGATION TO THE SOCHI OLYMPICS

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, I rise this evening to speak briefly about the delegation chosen by President Obama to represent the United States at the opening and closing ceremonies of the 2014 Olympic Winter Games in Sochi, Russia. I would also like to offer a few suggested additions to the delegation.

As Members know, Janet Napolitano, former Secretary of Homeland Security, will lead the U.S. delegation to the opening ceremonies on February 7. Our Deputy Secretary of State, William Burns, will lead our delegation to the closing ceremonies on February 23. Our two delegations will include tennis legend Billy Jean King, gold medalist figure skater Brian Boitano, gold medalist figure skater Bonnie Blair, silver medalist hockey player Caitlin Cahow, and Olympic gold medalist speed skater Eric Heiden. These individuals are American sports figures who should be lauded for their contributions. I am confident they will represent us well.

May I suggest with all seriousness that this delegation could well be expanded. Some have asked what message the President might be trying to send to Russia in choosing this delegation. White House Press Secretary Jay Carney asserted this morning that “in the selection of the delegation, we are sending the message that the United States is a diverse place.” Whether we are sending a message or simply pointing to our diversity, I submit our official delegation would be enhanced by adding the following: an American citizen of Russian parentage, perhaps a Russian orphan adopted and raised to adulthood by loving parents in the United States would be a good addition to this delegation or a Syrian American who has fled the barbaric and treacherous rule of Bashar al-Assad in Syria. In addition, an Iranian-American exile from the oppressive and murderous regime in Iran might make an outstanding addition to this delegation. I would also suggest that LTG Keith Alexander, the Director of the National Security Agency in this administration, would be an appropriate representative also of the United States of America.

So whether it is messaging that is taking place or simply diversity, I strongly suggest this outstanding delegation could be improved by these individuals and perhaps others.

I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

THE BUDGET

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I wish to speak tonight on two subjects. The first is the budget resolution, the bipartisan, bicameral budget resolution conference report we approved today. This is the first time in a number of years we have actually been able to debate and find some consensus on a bipartisan blueprint for spending for the balance of this fiscal year. I commend Senator MURRAY and Congressman RYAN for their work and for their leadership and their willingness to find the middle.

My wife and I celebrate our 28th anniversary in about 2 weeks. Actually, it is a few minutes after midnight on New Year's Day. One of the things I love to do when I talk to people who have been married a lot longer than we have is to ask them the secret for being married a long time. I have heard all kinds of answers—hilarious answers, some very poignant answers. The best answer I ever heard is the answer of the two Cs. The first time someone said that to me I said: What are they? They said: Communicate and compromise. Communicate and compromise. As it turns out, that is not just the secret for a long marriage between two people, but it is also the secret for a vibrant democracy. If we are to continue to thrive as a nation and to meet our responsibilities, it will be by doing what our leaders on the Budget Committees have done; that is, communicated at great length with one another, developed a sense of trust with one another, an understanding of the other's views, and being willing to compromise and find their way to the middle.

Everyone here could fault some aspect of the agreement that was struck. I can, and I know others can. But I wish to commend them and thank them for the effort that went into getting this one.

The Presiding Officer has heard me say once or twice in the last year or so that there are three key ingredients to making real progress, major progress, on deficit reduction, and one of those is entitlement reform which saves the programs for future generations, saves money, and does not savage old people or poor people. The second is tax reform, which helps us lower some of the corporate rates a bit as well as generates revenues for deficit reduction. The third element is the notion of looking at everything we do in Federal Government—everything we do—and answer this question: How can we get a better result for less money or the same amount of money?

As we approach the next budget resolution next spring and the next opportunity to revisit these issues of spending, including domestic spending, defense spending, entitlement spending, and revenues, my hope is that we will be able to make even greater progress by focusing also on those three critical elements. So that is one of the things I wanted to speak about.

MAYORKAS NOMINATION

The other issue I wish to speak about actually is a person; that is, a fellow named Alejandro Mayorkas. He has been nominated by the President to serve as the Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. He was nominated some 8 months ago.

As the Presiding Officer may recall, I have the privilege of chairing the committee of jurisdiction over Homeland Security, the Committee on Homeland and Government Affairs, and we are responsible for working with the administration. We are also responsible, as are a lot of other folks in this country and outside of it, to help protect our Nation's security both at home and abroad. At the same time we strive on our committee to make sure Federal agencies work better, work smarter, and more efficiently with the resources we entrust to them. We are an oversight committee.

During my years in public service, I have learned that the most important ingredient in enabling organizations to work well is leadership. That is the case both in government and in the private sector, in organizations large and small. Part of our shared responsibility is ensuring that we have effective leaders in place across our Federal Government. It is every Senator's constitutional role to provide advice and consent on the President's nominees in a thorough and timely manner as part of the Senate's confirmation process. While we in Congress hope to soon wrap up our 2013 session, it is going to be with far less to show than many of us would have liked, but at least the Senate will have had an opportunity to fill some key leadership positions across the Federal Government and to confirm a number of judges in many courts where they need a judge or two.

One of the roles that needs to be filled, again, is that of Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. This Department, as we know, plays a critical role in protecting our Nation and its citizens from harm. Whether the threat relates to terrorism from abroad, to home-grown extremists, to cyber attacks or natural disaster, this Department and the folks who work there are on the frontline for us.

Because of the Department's significant role in the security of our country, I have been very concerned—very concerned—for many months about the high number of senior level vacancies at the Department of Homeland Security. In fact, the Department has been without a Senate-confirmed Deputy Secretary since April and without a Senate-confirmed Secretary since I think late last summer.

Earlier this week, we took an important step to address this problem by voting to confirm Jeh Johnson, a good man, as the next Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security with an overwhelming bipartisan vote. I wish to thank our Republican colleagues for joining us in that vote. That is good news. But we should not stop there. We need to ensure that Secretary Johnson has a Senate-confirmed leadership team in place and that certainly includes Alejandro Mayorkas as his Deputy.

I wish to take a few minutes, if I could, to speak in strong support of the nomination of Director Mayorkas' nomination and explain why I am convinced he is one of the leaders we urgently need at the Department of Homeland Security. As of this week, more than 8 months have passed since former Deputy Secretary Jane Holl Lute stepped down from her post at DHS, and nearly 6 months have passed since the President has nominated this man, currently the Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, for that post. It is time to put in place Senate-confirmed leadership in this very important Deputy Secretary position.

The former Deputy Secretary—the last Senate-confirmed Deputy Secretary for this Department—was a woman named Jane Holl Lute, a very impressive leader in her own right and widely respected not just by members of the committee but by many of our colleagues, Democrats and Republicans, in the Senate for her leadership, management skills, expertise, and for her candor. She helped DHS make strides in many areas; for example, in narrowing the operational and management issues identified as high risk by the Government Accountability Office. Ever since the Department of Homeland Security was created, it has been on the high-risk list every other year by GAO. They put it out at the beginning of every Congress, and one of the leaders, if you will, in terms of getting a lot of mentions on the high-risk list, is the Department of Homeland Security.

One of the criticisms of the Department for the last 10 years is they never passed a financial audit. They are supposed to, under a law passed roughly 20 years ago, and little by little every Federal agency, except the Department of Defense, has become auditable and then finally achieved a clean audit. Last week we learned the Department of Homeland Security, within 10 years or so, finally has achieved that goal.

Why is that important? Because what we cannot measure, we cannot manage. This is a big Department, spread out across the country. There are 22 disparate agencies, with hundreds of thousands of employees, and they need to be well managed.

One of Jane Holl Lute's accomplishments, along with Janet Napolitano, the former Secretary, was to make them auditable and to get them a clean audit. I think it is safe to say that the Department needs somebody with the same kind of commitment and willingness to tackle problems head-on that Jane Holl Lute brought to the job.

Similarly, Director Mayorkas understands and is well prepared to tackle these management challenges and is committed to continuing these reform efforts needed to move the Department forward.

Director Mayorkas has a distinguished record of leadership in public service. In fact, he has been confirmed by the Senate not once but twice—first as the U.S. attorney for the Central District of California, the youngest U.S. attorney in the country at the time, and again in his current capacity as the leader of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. He has also served as a partner in a major U.S. law firm, O'Melveny & Myers.

Director Mayorkas has a long and distinguished record in law enforcement. As an assistant U.S. attorney, he aggressively prosecuted drug traffickers, human smugglers, and violent criminals. As U.S. attorney, Mr. Mayorkas led the largest Federal judicial system in the United States and was appointed by then-U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno to serve on her advisory committee on ethics and government. Moreover, while a partner at O'Melveny & Myers, he served as chair of the firm's Values Committee and he was a recipient of the firm's annual Values Award.

Since his confirmation by voice vote by the Senate in 2009, Director Mayorkas has served as Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. He has skillfully led the largest immigration system in the world. In this capacity, Director Mayorkas has been responsible for an 18,000-member workforce that maintains more than 200 offices worldwide and is supported by a $3 billion budget.

Director Mayorkas has led the effort to turn around an agency that was widely considered to be foundering. He has helped to put it on the path to professionalism and competence. His first action after being confirmed several years ago was to order a top-to-bottom review of the agency to identify its strengths and to identify its weaknesses.

When the review concluded, Director Mayorkas became concerned that Citizenship and Immigration Services was prioritizing speed over security when it came to processing visa applications. In order to make sure that national security concerns were getting the proper attention, he created an entirely new directorate responsible for policing visa issuance, reporting directly to him. This ensured that national security professionals would have a seat at the management table and a voice in all major decisions.

Director Mayorkas has proven that he is an exceptional manager during his time at U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. Let me give a couple concrete examples of how he has made the agency more effective.

He dramatically improved what I believe is one of the most important programs in all of DHS; that is, E-Verify. This is a voluntary program that allows employers to check whether prospective employees are eligible to work in the United States. I was pleasantly surprised to learn that under Director Mayorkas' leadership, the number of employers using E-Verify tripled—from 156,000 employers in 2009 to almost half a million today. The number of people processed by E-Verify also increased from nearly 9 million to over 20 million people. That is remarkable improvement in this important program.

His implementation last year of the President's Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals Program—a hugely complicated and challenging undertaking that brought hundreds of thousands of people out of the shadows—has also been widely praised.

Within 60 days, Director Mayorkas managed to implement a program that processed hundreds of thousands of people while ensuring that the appropriate security checks were performed. I think it is a stunning achievement.

Here is something else I found interesting. Just yesterday, the Partnership for Public Service issued its rankings of the best places to work in the Federal Government in 2013—just yesterday. On the one hand, I was dismayed to find out that the Department of Homeland Security ranked last on their list of Cabinet Departments. However, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, led by Ali Mayorkas, was one of the highest ranked components within the Department of Homeland Security, coming in, I think, at 76 out of some 300 Federal agencies. And after Alejandro Mayorkas took over in 2009, employee satisfaction with senior leadership did not drop; it increased by over 20 percent. We need more of that kind of proven and committed leadership at DHS.

Everything I have learned about Director Mayorkas over the past year—and I have learned a lot—has led me to conclude that he is an exceptional candidate to be the next Deputy Secretary at this Department.

But don't just take my word for it. Director Mayorkas has received glowing accolades from a number of our colleagues who have worked closely with him.

I might also say that he has been strongly endorsed by every single former Secretary of this Department, every one of them, two appointed by George W. Bush and one by our current President. They have all endorsed him.

He has also been endorsed by a number of our colleagues—MARY LANDRIEU, who knows him well, who is a valued member of our committee; DIANNE FEINSTEIN from California, who recommended Director Mayorkas for his positions—both as U.S. attorney out there to President Clinton and to President Obama for his current leadership position.

We have also received dozens of letters from a distinguished, bipartisan group of individuals and organizations asking us to move forward with this nomination. I want to take a minute or two, if I could, right now to share with our colleagues what some of these distinguished people have been saying about Director Alejandro Mayorkas.

Among those writing on his behalf are many individuals whom a lot of us deeply respect. I mentioned Jane Holl Lute, the previous Deputy Secretary; and Richard Skinner, the last Senate-confirmed Department of Homeland Security inspector general, who was nominated by former President George W. Bush.

I particularly value what Jane Holl Lute has to say given that she has an unparalleled perspective on what it takes to be an effective Deputy Secretary. She was one herself, and she was terrific. Here is what she said about Director Mayorkas:

As I have come to know Ali, I can tell you that he asks no more of others than he does of himself, and, in leading by example, sets a standard of excellence for all who consider themselves committed to public service. In my view, Homeland Security could be in no better hands.

That is Jane Holl Lute.

In one of two support letters—not one but two support letters—Richard Skinner, the last Senate-confirmed inspector general of the Department of Homeland Security—again, a Bush appointee—he sent two letters to our committee, including one earlier this month, and in it he said this of Ali Mayorkas:

During my tenure as Inspector General, Mr. Mayorkas demonstrated that he possessed the intellectual wherewithal to make objective and often times very tough decisions on complex, multifaceted issues, and a genuine commitment to the mission, vision, and core values of the U.S. Department of Homeland Security. He is a strong leader who will be able to bring together diverse interests in collaborative efforts.

That is the last Senate-confirmed inspector general for this Department.

The list of supporters for Director Mayorkas also includes other senior officials in the George W. Bush administration, such as Kenneth Wainstein, who was President Bush's Homeland Security Advisor. Here is what Mr. Wainstein had to say:

Ali has consistently shown an exceptional ability to mobilize, manage, and lead people and organizations . . . as USCIS Director, he has effectively led a large and complex organization during a time of continuing change and challenge. His marked success in that difficult role is a strong predictor of his performance in the Deputy Secretary position.

Again, that is what Mr. Wainstein had to say. I could not agree more.

Those from the law enforcement community also laud Director Mayorkas. For example, we received strong letters of support from the people charged with securing our borders during the George W. Bush administration: Robert Bonner, Ralph Basham, and Jason Ahern—all of whom served as Commissioner of Customs and Border Protection within the Department of Homeland Security.

Mr. Bonner wrote:

It is not merely his willingness to serve the public good that impels me to write this letter of support for his nomination, it is rather my firm belief that Ali has the experience, skills, talents, and plain old good judgment to be an effective Deputy Secretary, perhaps the best DHS has ever had.

Having succeeded Jane Holl Lute, that is saying a mouthful.

Mr. Basham also wrote:

Mr. Mayorkas has already served the Department well and honorably in the role of Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. I also believe Mr. Mayorkas to be a public servant of integrity with a clear and distinguished track record of leadership.

Mr. Ahern, also one of the past Commissioners of this Department, said these words:

It is my strong opinion that Director Mayorkas' experience and leadership will be invaluable as DHS continues the work of protecting the homeland against threats of all kinds. As the Department of Homeland Security continues to mature, Alejandro Mayorkas is the right leader to continue that development and also meet the many critical mission challenges faced every day.

Think about it. The three most senior border security officials who served under George W. Bush all agree that Director Ali Mayorkas would make an outstanding Deputy Secretary. They have worked with him in many cases. They know him. They have seen him up close and in person. They have watched him lead.

But it is not only former DHS officials who feel that way. Chuck Canterbury, the national president of the Fraternal Order of Police, said that Director Mayorkas' "professionalism, leadership skills and integrity make him an ideal candidate for this post."

All of these individuals who have worked closely with Director Mayorkas have spoken highly of him. They cite his integrity, his commitment to excellence, and his tenacity.

I will close with this. At his confirmation hearing Director Mayorkas said that his goal in life has always been to bring honor to his parents. His parents brought him to this country as a refugee from Cuba when he was 1 year old, he and his brothers. They worked hard every day to give him and his brothers the opportunity to go to school and make a better life for themselves. Like his parents, Alejandro Mayorkas has worked hard all of his life. He has worked hard and he has worked hard in part to make them proud.

I believe he has brought great honor to them and to this country and, if confirmed, would continue to do so as Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

I urge all of my colleagues to support his nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The assistant majority leader.

Mr. DURBIN. I wish to say a word about the statement made by my colleague from Delaware.

Senator CARPER and I came to Congress together over 30 years ago in the House of Representatives. He left for a short interlude to become Governor of the State, and then I recall making a telephone call to him 1 day saying would you consider joining me again in the Senate, and he was kind enough to do so. The people of Delaware were wise enough to elect him. I have known TOM CARPER for a long time. He is an honorable man, a man of integrity.

This is a controversial nomination on the other side of the aisle. There are some who question the integrity of Mr. Mayorkas and his fitness to be chosen for this position. I have met him. He makes a positive impression and a very strong case that he should continue in public service. But what I respect most is my colleague, Senator TOM CARPER, chairman of this committee, has gone to extraordinary lengths to investigate every allegation, to answer every question, and to be there to work with the other side of the aisle to try to resolve any problems that they have with this nomination. Sadly, he has not been successful. There are still some on the other side who will oppose him.

I spoke to Senator REID, the majority leader, earlier this week, and said: If TOM CARPER believes that Ali Mayorkas is an honorable man based on his investigation, I trust TOM CARPER. I don't believe he would ever mislead the American people, the people of Delaware, or the Senate. We should confirm this man. The allegations that have been made against him have not been substantiated and, frankly, should not ruin what is an extraordinary public career and an opportunity for him to continue to serve this Nation that he loves.

I thank TOM CARPER for his leadership, for his integrity, and his commitment to fairness to make sure that this man is treated fairly by the Senate.

TRIBUTE TO DR. RUSSELL DOHNER

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, many times in life we are in a doctor's office, and many times in life it is a tense, worrisome moment when we are waiting for that doctor to make a diagnosis or to tell us what we need to know about ourselves or someone we love. There are great doctors, and we hope that we are in the room with one at that moment. There are great doctors who are extraordinary surgeons and great researchers, but there are also great doctors who are caring, healing professionals who are there when we need them the most.

I wish to tell a brief story about one of them from my home State of Illinois, an exceptional man. Dr. Russell Dohner is a family doctor who retired quietly in October at the age of 88. He had been a practicing family practitioner in Rushville, IL, a small farming community in central Illinois, for 58 years. Dr. Dohner is the only doctor many families in Rushville have ever known, but the longevity of his career is only one small reason they love him.

For many families in Rushville and the neighboring towns, Dr. Dohner was a one-man solution to the problem of unaffordable health care. When he started practicing medicine in 1955, he charged the going rate around town for an office visit: $2. In 1970, with an apology, he had to raise his fee. His fee for an office visit was raised to $5, and that is where it stayed for 43 years. If families couldn't pay, Dr. Dohner would quietly signal to his office manager: No charge this time. He never, ever accepted medical insurance payments—said it wasn't worth the bother.

In 58 years as Rushville's family doctor, Dr. Dohner never—never—took a vacation. He worked 7 days a week. He started each day at the 25-bed hospital, Culbertson Memorial, where he checked on every single patient at the hospital.

At 10 a.m. he was in his office—a red brick storefront on the town square—to see his patients. There were no appointments. Dr. Dohner saw people in the order they arrived. Years back, he used to see 50 patients a day. His rule was if you were in his office by 5 p.m., he would see you, even if it meant working late into the night. The local pharmacy down the block stayed open until Dr. Dohner called to say he had seen his last patient.

But that wasn't the end of Dr. Dohner's day. After he saw his last patient in the office, he headed back to his hospital. That was his home away from home, as he called it. He ate dinner and went back to the hospital to check on his patients.

He made house calls for patients who were too sick or frail to get to his office. He visited his patients in nursing homes.

He took off a half day each week, Thursday afternoon. First he went to the local Rotary lunch and then, back in the day, he might even consider going fishing. The only time anyone in Rushville can remember Dr. Dohner leaving town was for a medical conference.

A few years back he had quadruple bypass surgery himself. The day he came home from the hospital, he went to work for a few hours.

Garry Moreland is a co-owner of the pharmacy down the street from Dr.

Dohner, and he said: "Healing is more than a dedication or a commitment, it's a calling."

Tim Ward, director of the foundation for Culbertson Memorial Hospital, said of Dr. Russell Dohner: "He's the closest thing we have to a saint."

Dr. Dohner's staff was just as dedicated as he was. His sister Clarice, who died in April, helped him set up his practice in 1955. She helped him buy his first car so he could make house calls and she managed his office for more than 40 years.

Edith Moore, his office assistant, died last July at the age of 85, working right up to the day of her death.

Rose Busby, one of Dr. Dohner's two nurses, retired about a year ago in her late eighties.

Nurse Florence Bottorff worked for Dr. Dohner for 50 years until he closed his office. She finally quit her nursing career at age 90.

Russell Dohner grew up on a farm just north of Rushville, outside the little town of Vermont, IL. He says he inherited his work ethic from his parents, who taught their seven kids the importance of working hard and taking care of others.

He was inspired to become a doctor by the town doctor who treated him for seizures when he was a child. After he served in the Army in World War II, he went to Western Illinois University on the GI bill and then, in the early 1950s, Northwestern University in Chicago, where he went to medical school.

He thought he was going to stay in Chicago and be a cardiologist. Instead, he became the heart of a small town. The long-time family doctor in Rushville was retiring and persuaded the newly minted Dr. Dohner to come home for just a year or two to fill the void. Well, the years stretched into decades and Doc Dohner found he just couldn't leave. There was always somebody who needed a helping hand.

The decision to stay in a small town cost him his marriage, but that was all right. Dr. Dohner said his patients were his family.

Similar to George Bailey in "It's a Wonderful Life," it seems Dr. Dohner has touched and enriched the lives of almost everyone in this small town. He estimates he has delivered 3,500 babies, more than the entire current population of the city of Rushville. Among those he brought into the world are Rushville's mayor and half of the staff at the local hospital. He once climbed down into a coal mine to help rescue four men.

Lynn Stambaugh is the CEO at Culbertson Memorial Hospital. Her younger sister suffered seizures as a baby. She remembers Doc Dohner coming to their house and sitting beside her sister's crib all night long to make sure she was going to be OK.

Carolyn Ambrosius recalled for a local reporter that her mom became pregnant at the age of 41, and a doctor in Springfield told her that either she was going to survive or the baby would survive but not both of them. She went home to Rushville in tears, and then she met with Doc Dohner. She remembers the Doc told her mother: God's going to take care of us, and I am going to help. Doc Dohner came to the house every day to check on Carolyn's mom and often stayed to have dinner with the family. Today, Carolyn Ambrosius's baby brother is a healthy middle-aged man.

Family doctors such as Doc Dohner are a disappearing breed. Only 2 percent of all medical students in a recent study expressed interest in practicing primary care as a general internist. Most medical students choose a more lucrative specialty field. In the United States, we are now short approximately 9,000 primary care doctors. The situation is not getting any better. In the next 15 years we are going to face a shortage of more than 65,000 primary care doctors.

Stephanie LeMaster is one of that special 2 percent, though. Stephanie grew up in Rushville. As a little girl, she wanted to be a nurse like her mom and her grandmother. At her mother's suggestion, she interviewed Doc Dohner for a fourth grade—fourth grade—school project. Listening to him talk about his love of doctoring, she changed her plans. Stephanie LeMaster is now a second-year medical student at Southern Illinois University. She says:

They tell me I should be the next Dr. Dohner, but I'm not sure I can live up to him. He's the only one like him.

Dr. Dohner has been recognized by State and national organizations as one of the best country doctors in America. He has been profiled in People magazine, featured on the "Today Show," and he was the grand marshal for the Illinois State Fair parade this year. In September, the town of Rushville unveiled a bronze statue of Dr. Dohner in the town's Central Park. It is about 200 feet from his old office. The statue depicts Dr. Donor seated on a park bench with a child listening to his heart through a stethoscope.

Besides doctoring and a little bit of fishing and the Rotary Club meeting, Doc Dohner also loves trees. Rushville mayor Curt Lunt estimates the doctor has donated thousands of trees to the town over the years.

It has been said you have to have faith in the future to plant a tree. The trees of Rushville symbolize not just Doc Dohner's faith in the future but also his love for that community that became his family.

Retirement is taking some adjustment for Doc Dohner. The last time he took a full day off he was in the Army in World War II. He refused to let the folks of Rushville hold any kind of retirement reception for him or run a story about him in the local newspaper. He said plenty of people retire every day and nobody makes any fuss over it. But few people touch a town as deeply as Dr. Dohner—Dr. Russell Dohner. He touched Rushville and the other small farm towns around it in such an amazing way.

You can be sure this holiday season, as they have for so many years, there are many people who count among their blessings that great Dr. Dohner, who served Rushville, IL, and America for so many decades.

RENEWABLE FUEL STANDARD

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, today, I, along with several other Senators, will be meeting with EPA Administrator McCarthy concerning a proposal from EPA to waive the renewable fuel standard, or RFS. If the proposed rule is made final, it would undermine one of the biggest policy tools we have to support energy independence, to lower greenhouse gas emissions, and stabilize our rural economy.

The renewable fuel standard was created in 2002 to drive growth in the biofuels industry. Why is that so important? When biofuels are contributing to our domestic fuel supply, we use less petroleum-based energy. Gasoline blended with ethanol burns more cleanly, so cars are generating less greenhouse gas; And with a steady, predictable market for biofuels, there is now a healthy biofuels industry that supports hundreds of thousands of jobs.

Each year the Environmental Protection Agency sets volume standards for renewable fuels that requires refiners to blend certain levels of biofuels into the fuel supply. RFS levels have been steadily increasing by law since Congress updated the renewable fuels effort in 2007.

The renewable fuel standard has worked well. The United States needs to be less reliant on other countries for its energy. Growth in the use of biofuels—particularly corn-based ethanol—is one of the few, meaningful steps we have taken. And it is working. Last year, we used 13.3 billion gallons of ethanol to displace 465 million barrels of oil. That is 12 percent of the total U.S. crude oil imports.

Not only do biofuels play an important role in energy independence, they have the added benefits of being good for the environment. The renewable fuel standard promotes the adoption of biofuels explicitly because they reduce greenhouse gas emission.

Many of my colleagues may know that in Illinois we grow a lot of corn. Not surprisingly, we also happen to be one of the largest producers of corn-based ethanol—the biofuel most often cited as not being as “green” as other biofuels. But even ethanol is required to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 20 percent.

A recent study by Argonne National Lab found that, on average, ethanol reduces greenhouse gas emissions by 24 percent. In 2012, ethanol reduced emissions from cars and trucks by 33.4 million tons. That is the equivalent of taking 5.2 million cars off the road.

But it is not just ethanol. Advanced biofuels reduce greenhouse gas emissions even further. They are required to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by at least 50 percent. That is why groups like the American Lung Association have supported the development and use of biofuels. And while many advanced biofuels are just beginning to come online, others—like biodiesel—are getting closer to really hitting their stride.

An added benefit of growth of biofuels in States like Illinois is the effect it has had on our rural economy. The use of biofuels has helped create an additional market for crops, but it also has created an emerging industry in rural communities. There are now 14 ethanol plants and 5 biodiesel plants operating in Illinois. Steady biofuels production in Illinois means new jobs in communities that were having trouble economically even before the recession. Those 14 ethanol plants have led to 5,400 direct jobs in Illinois and payroll exceeding $250 million.

EPA issued a draft rule last month that would waive the statutory RFS levels for 2014 below levels even required in 2012. By waiving the standard as proposed, the rule not only threatens the current biofuels industry, but it will significantly slow or stop more advanced biofuels coming to the market. In effect, what EPA has proposed would stop any new growth in the industry.

Today, most gasoline is blended with 10 percent ethanol, more commonly referenced as E-10. Some think of this level as a “blend wall” because to increase the blend ratio, we need more investment in infrastructure like gas pumps that deliver it. But if we get stuck at E-10, that effectively shuts down for many biofuels. Corn-based ethanol already is produced at levels to completely saturate the market at E-10, leaving little room for growth advanced cellulosic ethanol.

Part of the reason for creating the RFS was to help create incentives to push past barriers like the blend wall. EPA has already approved a pathway to doing just that in the form of E-15. But instead of using RFS to help push through infrastructure hurdles to biofuel growth, EPA’s proposal would enshrine this market barrier as the true ceiling for much of our biofuels growth.

And EPA’s proposed rule is already reverberating through the market. Investments in biofuels, particularly advanced biofuels, are already starting to slow, based on the proposed rule. I heard from a company in Illinois that had recently announced new investments in their plant. They are now rethinking their expansion plans. That means if EPA’s proposed waiver is adopted, we may never realize the full benefits of RFS that Congress intended. We will freeze our progress on reducing greenhouse gas emission. We will limit a tool in securing our energy independence. And we will stymie the growth of an industry that is playing an important role in rural economies.

That is why I am working with like-minded Senators on both sides of the aisle to urge the EPA to reconsider this rule before it is finalized. We have come too far to take this giant step backward. Biofuels are an important part of our energy future and the right path for our country.

TRIBUTE TO COLONEL RICHARD D. ROOT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, our men and women in uniform sacrifice much to keep our Nation strong and free. They are well-trained, extraordinarily capable and are some of our country’s best and brightest. One of them is a man I want to help recognize today as he retires from the U.S. Army.

COL Richard D. Root, from Hartford, MI, has served our country in uniform for a quarter of a century and I am delighted to congratulate him on a long and distinguished military career. In 2007, Colonel Root came to the Senate as the Deputy for the Army’s Senate liaison office. He was then selected as the Director of legislative affairs for GEN John Allen, the commander, International Security Assistance Force, ISAF, during the critical period in Afghanistan from 2011 to 2013. In this capacity, Colonel Root escorted over 70 congressional delegations visiting Afghanistan and Pakistan. During these congressional delegations, Colonel Root masterfully balanced both the interests of Senators with the priorities of his commander to ensure that Members of Congress received a clear and accurate picture of the strategic military and political situation in Afghanistan.

Prior to his service with congressional liaison, Colonel Root performed with great distinction in all of his assignments throughout his extraordinary career, including command of the 3rd Battalion, 320th Field Artillery Regiment “Red Knights” during Operation Iraqi Freedom from 2005 to 2006. Additionally, he served as an executive officer for the 4th Infantry Division Artillery and a variety of other tactical and operational assignments from platoon to brigade while deployed for the invasion of Iraq in 2003 and for Operation Desert Storm/Desert Shield in 1991.

In his final assignment as the executive officer to the chief of army legislative liaison, Colonel Root worked tirelessly to expand relationships between the Army and the 113th Congress.

Our military personnel do not shoulder the stress and sacrifice of military service alone, and Colonel Root is no exception. His wife, Diann, and his daughter, Lexi, have stood proudly by his side, sacrificing time with their husband and father while he fulfilled his military commitments. To them also, we offer a truly heartfelt thanks.

As he retires, Colonel Root leaves behind an impressive record of military service and his counsel, professionalism and expertise will surely be missed by the Army and Congress alike. We offer him our sincere thanks for his service to our Nation and the example he has set for those under his command and colleagues with whom he served. I know my colleagues join me in wishing Colonel Root and his family all the best as they begin this next exciting chapter in their lives.

ITALIAN HALL TRAGEDY IN CALUMET, MICHIGAN

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, a century ago on December 24, 1913, hundreds of miners and their families had gathered for a Christmas Eve celebration in the small Upper Peninsula town of Calumet, MI. Their community was under tremendous stress; the miners of what is known to this day as "Copper Country" had been on strike for 5 months. But they had come for a brief holiday respite from the trials and struggles of those difficult days.

What began as a joyful day ended in tears and wails and inconsolable grief. While no one will know for certain what sparked the families' rush to the doors at the bottom of the stairs leading from the hall, most believe that someone yelled "Fire!" even though there was none. What resulted in the rush to the exit is almost unimaginable: 59 children and 14 adults were dead, having been trampled or suffocated.

This dreadful disaster has forever brought back painful memories on December 24, Christmas Eve, for the community of Calumet, MI. On the centennial anniversary of this event, the anguish is still real. The sadness is only overshadowed by the senselessness of the event.

The families celebrating in the Italian Hall were hard-working immigrants, struggling through the labor strike to fight for better wages, hours and working conditions. They came to Copper country for the promise of work, even though mining was difficult and dangerous. This area was home to the largest known deposits of pure elemental copper in the world, drawing hundreds of thousands of people from around the world. It was here that the lives of immigrants shaped our nation, with their successes and their struggles.

So many reminders of the copper mining heyday remain in the quaint town. From the historic architecture to the Yooper accents; from the variety of ethnic foods to the hard living work ethic that exists today, the Copper Country communities are reminded every day of their heritage. The historic buildings, landscapes and museum collections of the area are protected and preserved by the Keweenaw National Historical Park, working collaboratively with local and State governments, historic organizations and private property owners. The park brings to life the multi-faceted story of copper mining history including its social, ethnic, commercial and technological dimensions. However, no artifact can compete with the feeling that Christmas Eve presents to the Village of Calumet every year when it is reminded of the Italian Hall tragedy.

On this centennial, we remember those who perished, and celebrate their lives and the heritage they have left for us.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

CAPTAIN REID NISHIZUKA

Mr. SCHATZ. Mr. President, today I wish to honor the memory of one Hawaii's fallen sons, Air Force Capt. Reid Nishizuka of Kailua.

I was deeply saddened to learn of Captain Nishizuka's death after an MC-12 aircraft carrying him and three of his fellow airmen crashed outside Kandahar Airfield in Afghanistan on April 27, 2013.

Captain Nishizuka heard the call to military service early in his life. While attending Kailua High School, he served as the commander of his Junior ROTC class before he joined the ROTC at the University of Notre Dame.

Through his training as a reserve officer, Captain Nishizuka cultivated the skills and experience that prepared him to commission as a Second Lieutenant in the U.S. Air Force.

With a passion for flying and a spirit of service to a cause greater than himself, Captain Nishizuka embodied the commitment and character that make our military great.

His family and friends will remember his gentle and unconditional love and support.

I hope his family finds solace in knowing that Captain Nishizuka's service exceeded all measures of honor, courage, and devotion to his country.

America will not forget his sacrifice, nor will we ever repay the great debt we owe his family for allowing their son to give his life in service to his Nation.

I stand today before the Senate on behalf of a grateful nation to recognize and remember Capt. Reid K. Nishizuka.

I ask for a moment of silence in honor of Captain Nishizuka's memory as a son, a brother, a friend, and an airman.

TRIBUTE TO MARILYN JONES

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today I wish to recognize Marilyn Jones, who has served as a valued member of my staff and the staff of my friend and predecessor, Senator John Warner.

Though she was born in North Carolina, Marilyn has a long history of service to the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia. She is a remarkably compassionate woman who often worked tirelessly with our most vulnerable populations—our senior citizens and veterans. There are many extraordinary stories about constituents whose lives she has touched. One in particular stands out to me: Last year, we were contacted by the wife of a veteran whose husband was hospitalized at a private hospital because of an emergency. Unfortunately, he passed away the next day and the Department of Veterans Affairs refused to pay for his care. Marilyn successfully worked with the private hospital to make sure that the veteran's care in his final hours would not become a financial burden to his widow.

Marilyn joined Senator John Warner in 1981 as a correspondence management specialist and rose to the position of caseworker. When Senator John Warner retired, Marilyn joined my staff to continue helping the people of Virginia. Because of her diligent work, she was promoted first to constituent services representative and then constituent services director. Marilyn has also been a dedicated member of her community in Richmond. She attended Virginia Union University and is an active member of her church, New Jerusalem International Christian Ministries, where she has been known to knit items for fellow church members. She has one beloved daughter, Shannan Hester.

After over 30 years of working for the people of the Commonwealth of Virginia, Marilyn Jones is retiring. Marilyn, thank you for dedicating your career to public service and best of luck in the future.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

REMEMBERING JAMES VON DER HEYDT

• Mr. BEGICH. Mr. President, I wish to pay tribute to James von der Heydt. In his over half a century of service, James von der Heydt built a lasting legacy with distinguished service in all three branches of government. Coming to Alaska in 1943 originally to work on the construction of the ALCAN Highway, James demonstrated the versatility for which Alaskans are famous. By 1945, he was a deputy U.S.

Marshall in Nome. Seeking to give more to his new home State, James left Alaska in 1948 to attend law school. When he returned, he served as the U.S. Commissioner at Nome and then as the United States attorney for Alaska. He served in the Alaska Territorial Legislature in the 1957 session and then became one of the first superior court judges when Alaska became State in 1959. In 1966, President Johnson appointed him to serve as a judge in the U.S. District Court for Alaska where he continued to shape the interpretation of Federal laws in Alaska for the next three decades. We will all miss his love of Alaska, wisdom, and compassion.●

AEROJET ROCKETDYNE'S CAMDEN PRODUCTION FACILITY

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today, I wish to recognize the dedicated employees at Aerojet Rocketdyne's production facility in Camden, AR. The employees, nearly 525 strong, recently achieved the milestone shipment of their 2,000th PAC-3 solid rocket motor and 400,000th PAC-3 attitude control motor to Lockheed Martin and the U.S. Army.

Aerojet Rocketdyne is recognized around the globe as an aerospace and defense leader proudly serving the missile, space propulsion, and armaments markets. Since 1998, the PAC-3 SRM and ACM rocket motors manufactured in Camden have been a noteworthy component of Aerojet Rocketdyne's industry-leading tactical propulsion portfolio.

The PAC-3 missile is a high-velocity interceptor, and it is the world's most advanced, capable, and powerful terminal air defense missile when deployed in a Patriot battery. It is capable of defeating the entire threat of tactical ballistic missiles, cruise missiles, and aircraft. The solid rocket motors produced in Camden are a vital component to the PAC-3 rocket receiving 100 percent effective rate during Operation Iraqi Freedom.

I am proud to recognize the dedicated and hard-working employees of Aerojet Rocketdyne for their outstanding achievement. This milestone is a reflection of their continued dedication to ensuring our men and women in uniform have the resources they need to carry out their missions effectively and efficiently. With this accomplishment and their future endeavors, the employees of Aerojet Rocketdyne in Camden, AR have earned our most sincere appreciation for a job well done.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. ALEXANDER (for himself, Mr. BARRASSO, Mr. ENZI, Mr. INHOFE, and Mr. ISAKSON):

S. 1849. A bill to amend the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act to provide for a fixed annual open enrollment period; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, I come to the floor, as I have frequently since the health care law was passed, as a doctor who has practiced medicine in Wyoming for a quarter of a century, taking care of people, providing low-cost blood screenings through the Wyoming Health Fair, of which I was the medical director. I was back in Wyoming last week talking to folks about their health care and their concerns.

With the end of the year rapidly approaching, Americans are gathering with family and friends to celebrate the holidays, to count their blessings. But from what I heard last weekend in Wyoming and on a telephone townhall meeting Monday night, very few people are thankful for the President's health care law.

I met yesterday with the Wyoming insurance commissioner. Fewer than 1,000 people have been able to sign up, but thousands have had their insurance canceled under the law. So many more people are suffering because of the law than people who are potentially able to benefit. This law was forced down the throats of the American people, supported unanimously by the Democrats in this body. It is continuing to disrupt people's lives and to cause them very real harm.

After a year of false starts and failures, what we have seen is that the President's health care law is nothing more than a collection of deception, delays, and disappointments. If you look at the headlines, the biggest disappointment was the launch of the healthcare.gov Web site in October. It was a total disaster. But it really is just the tip of the iceberg. The Web site failures are what people have seen across the country. That is the most visible, and it has obviously been the cause of concerns and jokes by the late-night comedians. But the real damage is going to start on January 1—damage to people's lives.

This was just about a computer screen. Below this tip of the iceberg is what people are actually noticing at home. They are paying higher premiums, and I am hearing that around the State of Wyoming; canceled coverage—thousands in Wyoming but over 5 million, I understand by last count, across the country. And we don't even know how many have been canceled in the States of Illinois, Texas, and Ohio. But we know that more than 5 million people have lost their coverage. People are finding out they can't keep their doctor. We are seeing that with seniors on Medicare, and we are seeing that with children who are going for cancer care. We are finding that people are having a harder time finding a doctor or even having to make choices as they go to the Web site: Well, do I want to keep my doctor or do I want to keep the hospital that I go to or do I want to keep the drug coverage I have? And many people are finding they can't find any plan that will let them keep everything they have now—in spite of the President's promise.

We are hearing more and more stories about fraud and identity theft across the country related to the health care Web site, including a Senate staff member who was signing up. It asked for his bank number and PIN number, and he called the helpline. He had to wait a long period of time to get through, as has been the experience for many Americans, and they said: No, that is not the regular Web site. That must be some kind of a scam trying to fraudulently take your information.

People are seeing higher copays and deductibles. The average deductible now is over $5,000 for people in bronze plans.

That is what is continuing to happen with this health care law.

October was just about the Web site. January is going to be about real people, their lives and their ability to get affordable quality care from the doctors they know and trust.

The Obama administration made a lot of promises about this law. The administration has known for months—I believe the administration has known for years that many of the promises were not true. They knew people would lose their doctors, and they knew millions of people would lose their health insurance plans. But instead of leveling with the American people, the White House chose to mislead them.

It continues to mislead them today on one important issue after another, and the people have seen through it. Washington Post, Tuesday, December 17, just yesterday: "Obama's approval ratings plummet. Poll results worrisome for Democrats looking to the midterm elections." A respected group, politifact.com, whose role is sorting out the truth in politics, has come up with their lie of the year, and they attribute their lie of the year for 2013 to President Obama: "If you like your health care plan, you can keep it." That is the lie of the year to the American people. So it is no surprise, then, that the President's approval ratings continue to plummet.

I looked at a decision this administration made very recently, a decision to delay next year's open enrollment season until after the midterm elections. To me, this is a blatant political move—a blatant political move that they snuck out the announcement just days before Thanksgiving.

So what kind of announcement is the administration going to try to sneak out now, just before Christmas? Well, the enrollment period for insurance coverage in 2015 was set to begin October 15, 2014, and then end in December. Now it won't begin until November 15. Why in the world would they need to delay it for a month? Enrollment in the government health insurance exchange has been a disaster, but the administration says it has fixed all the problems. So why do they want to delay it for a month? What is the difference between October 15 and November 15? I believe it is because the administration is in a panic mode, and it will do anything it can to hide the cost of the health care law on the American people—hide the skyrocketing costs. What they have done is they have moved it from a couple of weeks before the election until a couple of weeks after election day 2014.

The American people don't need more lies. What they need from their President is for the President to come clean about the terrible effects of the law. The fact is that many Americans can't keep their coverage, can't keep their doctors, and they can't afford this law.

The Associated Press put out a poll the other day. The headline was "Health Law Seen as Eroding Coverage." The health care is eroding coverage. According to the poll, 69 percent of people say their premiums will be going up and 59 percent say their deductibles and copayments will be increasing. People can't afford those kinds of price increases—this whole redistribution of assets and wealth on the American people. People were told by this President that their health care costs were going to go down. Instead, they are seeing them go up.

The Obama administration doesn't want people learning about their next increases right before the 2014 election, so they are trying to hide the truth. That is why today Senator ALEXANDER, Senator ENZI, and I plan to introduce a bill to give the American people the transparency they deserve when they are making important health care decisions for their families. We are calling this bill the Premium Disclosure Act, and it will do a couple of things.

First, the bill sets the exchange's opening date of October 15, 2014, in statute so that Democrats can't change it to meet their political goals around an election.

Second, the bill says the Obama administration has to make premiums and cost-sharing requirements public 30 days before the open enrollment begins, so people will have this important information in mid-September, making it easier for families to budget and to plan.

The Department of Health and Human Services has previously said it did not have this authority. That is why they said we need to wait until October 1 to find out what premiums would be this year. This bill would specifically give the administration the authority, so they will have no more excuses for hiding health insurance cost increases from the American people.

Americans wanted a few very simple things from health care reform. They wanted better access to care. Washington Democrats gave them less access. They wanted lower costs, but Washington Democrats gave them higher costs. They wanted help. Washington Democrats have caused them harm.

This bill will help add some transparency and shed light on things the Obama administration does not want the American people to see. The President's health care law has been a failure. It cannot be fixed just by delaying one more part or by sending out the spin doctors one more time or by having one more press conference. I hope when we return after the New Year that President Obama and Democrats in Congress will be ready to sit down with Republicans to talk about real bipartisan solutions that put patients and families first.

By Mr. MCCAIN:

S. 1851. A bill to provide for incentives to encourage health insurance coverage, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I am introducing the Empowering Patients First Act, companion legislation to H.R. 2300, introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman TOM PRICE. I thank Congressman PRICE for all the hard work he did on this legislation. I am very grateful for that.

I believe this legislation would give patients, families, and doctors the power to make medical decisions, and not Washington.

Specifically, this legislation would enable everyone to purchase health insurance through deductions, credits, or advanceable credits; equalize tax treatment of employer-sponsored plans and plans purchased by individuals by letting individuals buy health insurance with pre-tax dollars; let small business owners band together across State lines through association health plans, known as AHPs, and take advantage of the increased purchasing power which larger businesses are able to take advantage of through increased bargaining power, volume discounts, and administrative efficiencies. It would let consumers buy insurance across State lines, and let individuals own their insurance like a 401(k) plan so they can take it with them across State lines if they change jobs.

I don't think there is any doubt in the majority of Americans' minds—and poll after poll indicates—that ObamaCare is a failure. The American people do not believe in it. And it isn't just the problems with the rollout of the Web site—it is all of the aspects of it which have become so complex and so difficult.

Basically, it is as some of us who fought it day after day here on the floor said: an experiment in social engineering, where young people who are healthy are going to pay for the health care of those who are older and sicker—a redistribution of wealth that then-Senator Obama favored and stated when he was running for President.

That is not the way to address health care needs in America. It has not bent the health care curve down. It has not allowed people, if they want to keep their insurance, to be able to keep it. I noticed that was voted as the biggest lie of the year by one of the periodicals here. And it is a failure.

We on the other side of this issue are also required to come up with alternatives, because we vowed to repeal and replace ObamaCare, not just repeal it. I believe that what Congressman PRICE has introduced, and what I am introducing today as a companion bill, is a step in that direction.

It is time that we on this side of the aisle came up with our agenda for health care in America because we know that the inflation associated with health care costs is unsustainable, that there are millions of Americans who do not have health care, and there is a particular problem for those with preexisting conditions.

We need to repeal this horrendous mistake—which, by the way, was done on strictly party line votes, the first entitlement program ever enacted that was done without a single bipartisan vote on it. As many of us predicted back in 2009 when this legislation was passed, it was doomed to failure. Time after time, amendment after amendment, as we attempted to repeal it for 25 days, I believe it was, of floor consideration back in 2009, it was voted down on a party line basis.

They sowed the wind and are now reaping the whirlwind. We need to repeal the Affordable Care Act, and we need to replace it because health care in America is still not satisfactory, nor have we fulfilled the needs and the obligations we have to all of our citizens.

The problems with the Affordable Care Act are well known: A failed Web site rollout that has hindered enrollment and the purchase of mandated coverage. As of December 17, only an estimated 440,835 people have enrolled for a health plan. That is 6.2 percent of the enrollment goal of 7 million by March 31, 2014.

There is a destructive tax on medical devices that will discourage innovation and encourage these businesses to move offshore. We have already seen medical device manufacturers leaving the United States of America as they said they would if they were taxed to the point where they could not be competitive with medical devices that were manufactured in foreign countries.

There is disappointment for Americans who are happy with their current coverage and want to keep their coverage. It is estimated that 10 million Americans will have their health plans terminated due to ObamaCare.

According to a December 17 Washington Post-ABC poll, only 19 percent of Americans believe ObamaCare is improving the country's health care system. Only 8 percent believe ObamaCare is improving their insurance coverage. Only 5 percent of Americans believe their health care costs are decreasing as a result of ObamaCare, and 47 percent of Americans believe the President's health care law is increasing the cost of their health care.

It is clear that ObamaCare is not working for the American people, and they have little faith in the administration's efforts to fix our broken health care system.

This legislation I am introducing today makes the purchase of health care financially feasible for all Americans—from deductions to advanceable, refundable credits so that everyone has an economic incentive to purchase coverage they want for themselves and their families, not what the government forces them to buy. In addition, it allows greater choices in portability, so that every health policy is owned by the patient, regardless of who pays. This means the coverage would go with the person if they change or lose their job. It gives employers more flexibility in the benefits offered and provides many more coverage options for people with preexisting conditions so that no one is priced out of the market, regardless of health status.

It addresses increasing costs by clamping down on abusive lawsuits, ends the practice of defensive medicine, gains significant savings from health care efficiencies—sifting out waste, fraud, and abuse—and bringing our Nation's budget under control.

Finally, it establishes doctor-led quality measures, ensuring that patients receive quality care defined by people who know medicine, not by government. It encourages healthier lifestyles by giving employers and health policies more flexibility to offer discounts for healthy habits through wellness and prevention programs.

If enacted, this legislation would save trillions of dollars. Douglas Holtz-Eakin, who is the former director of the Congressional Budget Office and one of the most credible people in this town, estimates this legislation would save American tax payers $2.37 trillion in its first decade alone. According to the analysis of Mr. Holtz-Eakin, compared to current law this legislation would produce smaller premium increases on average, yielding lower premiums than current law—nearly 19 percent for single policies and up to 15 percent for family policies; increase patient access to physicians; produce a 10-percent increase in medical productivity; and increase the number of insured individuals by 29 percent.

Americans are looking for an alternative to ObamaCare. This legislation is a step in the right direction and will provide Americans an alternative that empowers patients, families, and doctors to make the medical decisions, not those in Washington, DC.

I find of interest in the Wall Street Journal an opinion piece entitled "ObamaCare's Troubles Are Only Beginning," by Michael Boskin, a very well respected economist. It says:

Be prepared for eligibility, payment and information protection debacles—and longer waits for care.

He says:

The shocks—economic and political—will get much worse next year and beyond. Here's why: The "sticker shock" that many buyers of new, ACA-compliant health plans have experienced—with premiums 30% higher, or more, than their previous coverage—has only begun. The costs borne by individuals will be even more obvious next year as more people start having to pay higher deductibles and copays.

If, as many predict, too few healthy young people sign up for insurance that is overpriced in order to subsidize older, sicker people, the insurance market will unravel in a "death spiral" of ever-higher premiums and fewer signups. The government, through taxpayer-funded "risk corridors," is on the hook for billions of dollars of potential insurance-company losses. This will be about as politically popular as bank bailouts.

The "I can't keep my doctor" shock will also hit more and more people in coming months. To keep prices to consumers as low as possible—given cost pressures generated by the government's rules, controls and coverage mandates—insurance companies in many cases are offering plans that have very restrictive networks, with lower-cost providers that exclude some of the best physicians and hospitals.

Finally, there is an article entitled "Second wave of health care plan cancellations looms." It goes on to say:

An analysis by the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank, shows the administration anticipates half to two-thirds of small businesses would have policies canceled or be compelled to send workers into the ObamaCare exchanges. They predict up to 100 million small and large business policies could be canceled next year.

I ask unanimous consent these articles be printed in the RECORD.

It is time for us to begin to consider alternatives and recognize that this legislation needs to be repaired and replaced.

I yield the floor.

OBAMACARE'S TROUBLES ARE ONLY BEGINNING
BE PREPARED FOR ELIGIBILITY, PAYMENT AND INFORMATION PROTECTION DEBACLES—AND LONGER WAITS FOR CARE.

(By Michael J. Boskin)

The White House is claiming that the Healthcare.gov website is mostly fixed, that the millions of Americans whose health plans were canceled thanks to government rules may be able to keep them for another year, and that in any event these people will get better plans through ObamaCare exchanges. Whatever the truth of these assertions, those who expect better days ahead for the Affordable Care Act are in for a rude awakening. The shocks—economic and political—will get much worse next year and beyond. Here's why:

The "sticker shock" that many buyers of new, ACA-compliant health plans have experienced—with premiums 30% higher, or more, than their previous coverage—has only begun. The costs borne by individuals will be even more obvious next year as more people start having to pay higher deductibles and copays.

If, as many predict, too few healthy young people sign up for insurance that is overpriced in order to subsidize older, sicker people, the insurance market will unravel in a "death spiral" of ever-higher premiums and fewer signups. The government, through taxpayer-funded "risk corridors," is on the hook for billions of dollars of potential insurance-company losses. This will be about as politically popular as bank bailouts.

The "I can't keep my doctor" shock will also hit more and more people in coming months. To keep prices to consumers as low as possible—given cost pressures generated by the government's rules, controls and coverage mandates—insurance companies in many cases are offering plans that have very restrictive networks, with lower-cost providers that exclude some of the best physicians and hospitals.

Next year, millions must choose among unfamiliar physicians and hospitals, or paying more for preferred providers who are not part of their insurance network. Some health outcomes will deteriorate from a less familiar doctor-patient relationship.

More IT failures are likely. People looking for health plans on ObamaCare exchanges may be able to fill out their applications with more ease. But the far more complex back-office side of the website—where the information in their application is checked against government databases to determine the premium subsidies and prices they will be charged, and where the applications are forwarded to insurance companies—is still under construction. Be prepared for eligibility, coverage gap, billing, claims, insurer payment and patient information-protection debacles.

The next shock will come when the scores of millions outside the individual market—people who are covered by employers, in union plans, or on Medicare and Medicaid—experience the downsides of ObamaCare. There will be longer waits for hospital visits, doctors' appointments and specialist treatment, as more people crowd fewer providers.

Those with means can respond to the government-driven waiting lines by making side payments to providers or seeking care through doctors who do not participate in insurance plans. But this will be difficult for most people.

Next, the Congressional Budget Office's estimated 25% expansion of Medicaid under ObamaCare will exert pressure on state Medicaid spending (although the pressure will be delayed for a few years by federal subsidies). This pressure on state budgets means less money on education and transportation, and higher state taxes.

The “Cadillac tax” on health plans to help pay for ObamaCare starts four years from this Jan. 1. It will fall heavily on unions whose plans are expensive due to generous health benefits.

In the nearer term, a political iceberg looms next year. Insurance companies usually submit proposed pricing to regulators in the summer, and the open enrollment period begins in the fall for plans starting Jan. 1. Businesses of all sizes that currently provide health care will have to offer ObamaCare’s expensive, mandated benefits, or drop their plans and—except the smallest firms—pay a fine. Tens of millions of Americans with employer-provided health plans risk paying more for less, and losing their policies and doctors to more restrictive networks. The administration is desperately trying to delay employer-plan problems beyond the 2014 election to avoid this shock.

Meanwhile, ObamaCare will lead to more part-time workers in some industries, as hours are cut back to conform to arbitrary definitions in the law of what constitutes full-time employment. Many small businesses will be cautious about hiring more than 50 full-time employees, which would subject them to the law’s employer insurance mandate.

On the supply side, medicine will become a far less attractive career for talented young people. More doctors will restrict practice or retire early rather than accept lower incomes and work conditions they did not anticipate. Already, many practices are closed to Medicaid recipients, some also to Medicare. The pace of innovation in drugs, medical devices and delivery is expected to slow significantly, as higher taxes and even rationing set in.

The repeated assertions by the law’s supporters that nobody but the rich would be worse off was based on a beyond-implausible claim that one could expand by millions the number of people with health insurance, lower health-care costs without rationing, and improve quality. The reality is that any squeezing of insurance-company profits, or reduction in uncompensated emergency-room care amounts to a tiny fraction of the trillions of dollars extracted from those people overpaying for insurance, or redistributed from taxpayers.

The Affordable Care Act’s disastrous debut sent the president’s approval ratings into a tailspin and congressional Democrats in competitive districts fleeing for cover. If the law’s continuing unpopularity enables Republicans to regain the Senate in 2014, the president will be forced to veto repeated attempts to repeal the law or to negotiate major changes.

The risk of a complete repeal if a Republican takes the White House in 2016 will put enormous pressure on Democratic candidates—and on Republicans—to articulate a compelling alternative to the cost and coverage problems that beset health care. A good start would be sliding-scale subsidies to help people buy a low-cost catastrophic plan, purchasable across state lines, equalized tax treatment of those buying insurance on their own with those on employer plans, and expanded high-risk pools.

[From FoxNews, Nov. 20, 2013]

SECOND WAVE OF HEALTH PLAN CANCELLATIONS LOOMS

A new and independent analysis of ObamaCare warns of a ticking time bomb, predicting a second wave of 50 million to 100 million insurance policy cancellations next fall—right before the mid-term elections.

The next round of cancellations and premium hikes is expected to hit employees, particularly of small businesses. While the administration has tried to downplay the cancellation notices hitting policyholders on the individual market by noting they represent a relatively small fraction of the population, the swath of people who will be affected by the shakeup in employer-sponsored coverage will be much broader.

An analysis by the American Enterprise Institute, a conservative think tank, shows the administration anticipates half to two-thirds of small businesses would have policies canceled or be compelled to send workers onto the ObamaCare exchanges. They predict up to 100 million small and large business policies could be canceled next year.

“The impact I’m mostly worried about is on small young, entrepreneurial firms that will suddenly face much higher health insurance premiums if they want to offer health insurance to their employees,” said AEI resident scholar Stan Veuger. “I think for a lot of other businesses . . . they can just send their employees to the exchanges or offer them a fixed subsidy every month to buy health insurance themselves.”

Under the health care law, businesses with fewer than 50 workers do not have to provide health coverage. But if they do, the policies will still have to meet the benefit standards set by ObamaCare.

As reported by AEI’s Scott Gottlieb, some businesses got around this by renewing their policies before the end of 2013. But the relief is temporary, and they are expected to have to offer in-compliance plans for 2015. According to Gottlieb, that means beginning in October 2014 the cancellation notices will start to go out.

Then, businesses will have to either find a new plan—which could be considerably more expensive—or send workers onto the ObamaCare exchanges.

For workers, their experience could mirror that of the 5 million or so on the individual market who already received cancellation notices because their plans did not meet new standards under the Affordable Care Act.

President Obama announced last week that insurance companies could offer out-of-compliance plans for another year. But that only means the cancellation notices will resume late next year.

Obama met Wednesday with state insurance commissioners about the change. In a statement afterward, National Association of Insurance Commissioners President Jim Donelon voiced concern with the change but said: “We will work with the insurance companies in our states to implement changes that make sense while following our mandate of consumer protection.”

The business community has already been hit with another side effect from ObamaCare. Because the law will require businesses with more than 50 full-time workers to offer health coverage, there are reports that companies are shifting employees to part-time status to avoid hitting the threshold.

Though the administration describes these accounts as anecdotal—and has already delayed the employer mandate by a year—studies suggest otherwise.

The International Franchise Association and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce have studied the impact and say the president’s health care law has resulted in higher costs and fewer full-time positions.

A survey showed 31 percent of franchise businesses, and 12 percent of non-franchise businesses, have already reduced worker hours. It also showed 27 percent of franchise businesses, and 12 percent of non-franchise businesses, have replaced full-time workers with part-time employees.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE RESOLUTION 323—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE ON MAINTAINING THE CURRENT ANNUAL ADJUSTMENT IN RETIRED PAY FOR MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES UNDER THE AGE OF 62

Mr. CHAMBLISS (for himself, Mr. ISAKSON, Ms. MURKOWSKI, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. HOEVEN, Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. BLUNT, and Mr. PORTMAN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

S. RES. 323

Whereas is the responsibility of Congress to get the fiscal house of government in order, and all government spending should be examined to achieve that goal;

Whereas HJ Res. 59 (113th Congress), a bipartisan budget proposal, is a first step in this direction, though it fails to address broader government spending issues;

Whereas retirees from the Armed Forces, both those who served a full career and those medically retired and their survivors, have provided great service and sacrificed much for our country;

Whereas HJ Res. 59 (113th Congress) disproportionately targets these military retirees in the name of fiscal responsibility; and

Whereas, while the decisions regarding future spending cuts may be difficult and painful, the solution should require contributions from all Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) retirees from the Armed Forces should not unfairly bear the burden of excessive government spending;

(2) military retirees earned the benefits they were promised upon entering military, and it is the duty of the Senate to protect them; and

(3) the Senate should seek alternatives to the provisions of section 403 of the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2103 (introduced as HJ Res. 59 (113th Congress)) before the effective date of that section and the amendments made by that section.

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a sense of the Senate resolution to address the issue of military retirement pay in this budget proposal.

It is the responsibility of Congress to get our fiscal house in order and that all government spending should be examined to achieve that goal. However, this budget proposal disproportionately targets the retirees of the U.S. Armed Forces in the name of fiscal responsibility.

We, as a body, acknowledge military retirees, both those who served full careers and those who have medically retired and their survivors. They have provided great service and sacrificed much for our country. Making decisions regarding future spending cuts would be difficult and painful, but the solution should require contributions from all Americans, not just our servicemembers who have sacrificed so much.

Therefore, I, along with Senator ISAKSON—and I am pleased to say Senator MURKOWSKI and Senator MCCAIN—have joined in offering a sense of the Senate resolution that military retirees should not unfairly bear the burden of our excessive government spending.

Our military retirees earned the benefits they were promised upon entering the military, and it is our duty to protect them.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator CHAMBLISS in this sense-of-the-Senate resolution. It is absolutely important that we not disproportionately burden those who have served us and who have saved us, and our veterans have done both. As we deal with the difficult decisions in the years ahead on getting our debt and our deficit in order, it is important that we all share part of the burden, that we all put our shoulder to the yoke and we make sure we don't disproportionately put it on our veterans or on any segment of our society. We are all in this together. But, most importantly, we are all here today because of the sacrifice of our men and women in harm's way, and we cannot single them out for disproportionate savings in terms of the budget and the deficit.

I commend Senator CHAMBLISS on his leadership, and I am happy to join him in this resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 324—EX- PRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE WITH RESPECT TO THE TRAGIC SHOOTING AT LOS AN- GELES INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT ON NOVEMBER 1, 2013, OF EM- PLOYEES OF THE TRANSPOR- TATION SECURITY ADMINISTRA- TION

Mr. ROCKEFELLER (for himself, Mrs. BOXER, and Mrs. FEINSTEIN) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 324

Whereas on November 1, 2013, a gunman entered Terminal 3 of the Los Angeles International Airport and opened fire at a security checkpoint, targeting the Transportation Security Officers who are charged with protecting our aviation system and the people of the United States;

Whereas Gerardo Hernandez, a 39-year-old resident of Porter Ranch, California, a beloved husband and father of two, lost his life in the shooting and tragically became the first Transportation Security Officer to be killed in the performance of his duties;

Whereas James Speer and Tony Grigsby, dedicated Transportation Security Officers and colleagues of the deceased officer, were wounded in the attack;

Whereas a member of the traveling public, Brian Ludmer, a 29-year-old high school teacher from Lake Forest, Illinois, was also injured; and

Whereas Transportation Security Officers, law enforcement personnel, first responders, and medical professionals acted courageously to subdue the gunman, secure the airport, help move passengers out of harm's way, and treat victims of the attack:

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) strongly condemns the senseless and appalling act of violence carried out at Los Angeles International Airport on November 1, 2013;

(2) offers its deepest condolences to the family, friends, and loved ones of Gerardo Hernandez;

(3) honors the dedicated public service of Gerardo Hernandez, James Speer, and Tony Grigsby;

(4) sends its hope for a quick recovery to the other victims of the horrific attack; and

(5) remains committed to preventing similar tragedies from happening again.

In the name, spirit, and way of all faith traditions of our Nation and world, we pray that the light, peace, hope, compassion, and joy of the season may be ours today.

As the Members and staff of this Congress complete their work at hand and return to communities and families for rest, respite, and celebration, may their lives be enriched and renewed. May those who stay behind to keep the embers of government aglow also be blessed with slower pace and lighter workload.

May the many people of our land for whom holidays are not so merry or bright be comforted in loss, healed in sickness, and sustained in their needs through the compassion, generosity, and love of fellow brothers and sisters guided by divine spirit.

May grace and blessings be upon our Nation and the entire planet as we celebrate this season of peace and seek to serve and live that same peace each and every day.

Amen.

SENATE—Thursday, December 19, 2013

The Senate met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable BRIAN SCHATZ, a Senator from the State of Hawaii.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Barry C. Black, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Eternal God, who has made us children of promise, thank You for bringing joy to our world. We are grateful for the freedom You have given us to enjoy. May we use this gift to live steadfast in liberty, refusing to be entangled in the chains that would shackle us with addictions and miseries.

During this season of cheer, give our Senators and their loved ones the gifts of love, joy, peace, patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, and self control. May they fulfill Your command to love their neighbors as they love themselves. Bless also the families and loved ones of our support staffs.

O God, let there be peace on earth. Let it begin with us. We pray in Your great Name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Presiding Officer led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

Mr. SCHATZ thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

WORKFORCE INVESTMENT ACT OF 2013—MOTION TO PROCEED—Resumed

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I move to proceed to S. 1356.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Motion to proceed to Calendar No. 243, S. 1356, a bill to amend the Workforce Investment Act of 1998 to strengthen the United States workforce development system through innovation in, and alignment and improvement of, employment, training, and education programs in the United States, and to promote individual and national economic growth, and for other purposes.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, following my remarks and those of the Republican leader, the Senate will resume consideration of the national defense authorization bill. Rollcall votes are possible throughout the day. We will do our best to notify Senators ahead of time as to when votes will occur.

DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION

Mr. REID. Mr. President, for more than 50 years consecutively; that is, 50 years in a row every year, the United States has passed the National Defense Authorization Act. This year is not going to be an exception. This tradition indicates the respect and gratitude with which Members of this institution regard the members of our military.

The work to get to this point has been extremely difficult. We have had the usual good work by one of the finest Senators ever, the senior Senator from Michigan, and also the cooperation and hard work of the ranking member of the committee, the senior Senator from the State of Oklahoma. It has been with some difficulty.

The Senator from Oklahoma has had physical problems and the tragic loss of his son in an unfortunate airplane accident. These two men have continued to move forward with this legislation. It is important to mention their counterparts in the House. This is an important piece of legislation that we are going to vote on.

Today, the Senate will continue debate on this critical measure which safeguards our Nation and ensures our troops have the resources and training they need. This bill includes a pay raise for members of the Armed Forces and reauthorizes dozens of special pay raises and bonuses, such as the bonus payment for servicemembers who are stationed overseas.

This legislation also supports military families who support the mission of our fighting men and women. Also, yesterday, we passed the Ryan-Murray budget—very important—because, among other things, it did away with the sequester, which would have been—if that second year would have kicked in, it would have been a $23 billion hit to the United States military. That is gone.

This year the National Defense Authorization Act also includes robust new provisions to combat sexual assault in the military and guarantee that the perpetrators are punished.

With cooperation, the Senate could easily pass this bill today. We could have done it last evening. With cooperation, the Senate could also consider a number of pending nominations today and Friday. Without cooperation from our Republican colleagues, Senators should expect late night and weekend votes.

NOMINATIONS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, after we complete work on the Defense authorization bill, this body will consider several essential nominations, including the new Federal Reserve Chair—so important, as we learned yesterday from the announcement of Chairman Ben Bernanke how terribly important that institution is. He is leaving. We need someone to replace him.

We also are going to approve a Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security, a new Director of the Internal Revenue Service. We will also consider a nomination that has been pending for 2 years—more than 2 years actually—the nomination of Brian Davis of Florida to fill a judicial seat that has been declared an emergency, as well as a handful of other nominations.

All those nominees are qualified and dedicated public servants. I have not heard a single word about these nominations being flawed in any way. Those nominees have broad bipartisan support. Their positions safeguard the economy, thus ensuring our national security. I am disappointed that Republican Senators have suggested that those nominees are nonessential or unimportant. I heard one Senator say: Just do them next year. Another said: Yes, they are nonessential. They are really unimportant. Why don't we do them next year?

Everyone should understand, the Senate will not wait until the new year to consider these nominations. These are critical nominations. If that means working through the weekend, next week, so be it. The Senate will finish its work before we leave for the holidays. It is our constitutional duty. Public servants who set our Nation's monetary policy and guard against terrorism and deliver us justice do not hold nonessential positions.

Is Janet Yellen, to be chosen as Federal Reserve Chair, nonessential? It is shallow to even suggest this. Brain Davis. I have already talked about this good man who has waited 2 years to become a Federal trial judge in Florida, that has too many criminal cases, too many civil cases, and it has been declared a judicial emergency. I suggest it is very shallow to suggest this nomination is unimportant and not essential.

Alejandro Mayorkas to be the No. 2 person at the Department of Homeland Security is vitally important, as has been laid out in detail by the chairman of the committee TOM CARPER. How shallow to think this important nominee is nonessential.

How about this one? John Koskinen to be Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service. With all that is going on in this country with ObamaCare, with all that is happening, we need someone to direct the Internal Revenue Service. To suggest this is not a critical position is really very shallow.

With all of the Republican obstruction and delay we have seen over the last 2 weeks, is it any wonder Democrats changed the rules last month? Of course not. The American people want Congress to work, not obstruct. Even under these new rules, Republicans are wasting weeks on matters that could be resolved in mere hours. As always, there is an easy and a hard way that we legislators can take. One is to move; the other is to obstruct. So far, my Republican colleagues have obstructed, and they continue to do so. The choice to obstruct is theirs. Their obstruction has become a bad habit of theirs. For the good of the country, their obstruction, these bad habits, need to go away.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2014

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will resume consideration of the House message to accompany H.R. 3304, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved, that the House concur in the Senate amendment to the title of the bill (H.R. 3304) entitled "An Act to authorize and request the President to award the Medal of Honor to Bennie G. Adkins and Donald P. Sloat of the United States Army for acts of valor during the Vietnam Conflict and to authorize the award of the Medal of Honor to certain other veterans who were previously recommended for award of the Medal of Honor," and be it further

Resolved, that the House concur in the first three Senate amendments to the text of the aforementioned bill, and be it further

Resolved, that the House concur in the fourth Senate amendment to the text of the aforementioned bill, with an amendment.

Pending:

Reid motion to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the bill, with Reid amendment No. 2552, to change the enactment date.

Reid amendment No. 2553 (to amendment No. 2552), of a perfecting nature.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 1859

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to S. 1859, submitted earlier today, a bill that includes the following provisions: an extension of the provision to exclude mortgage debt forgiveness from taxable income; deductions for State and local sales taxes, qualified tuition expenses for students, and classroom expenses that teachers pay for out of their own pockets; a commuter benefit that helps workers who take mass transit to their jobs every day; the new markets tax credit and the low-income housing credit; tax benefits to encourage investment in our Nation's infrastructure, such as the short line rail tax credit; provisions that encourage the development of renewable energy technology, including the production tax credit for wind, as well as credits to promote biofuels, alternative fuel vehicles, and energy-efficient buildings; and tax incentives for small and large businesses, including section 179 expensing, bonus depreciation, and the R&D credit.

I further ask that the bill be read a third time and passed and the motions to reconsider be made and laid on the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. McCONNELL. Reserving the right to object, it is unfortunate the Senate's schedule is completely full with pending cloture motions on controversial or completely nonurgent nominations.

If these nomination were deferred, we could consider this timely and important legislation today.

I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the pending cloture motions on executive nominations be withdrawn; that following disposition of the Defense bill, the Senate proceed to immediate consideration of H.R. 2668, a House-passed revenue measure; that the text of S. 1859 be the first amendment in order; and that the majority and minority sides then be recognized to offer amendments in an alternating fashion so these important issues could be considered this week.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, I would refer to the statement I gave earlier today, and I object.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is heard to the modification. Is there objection to the original request?

Mr. McCONNELL. I object.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is heard.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to briefly comment on the absurdity of what just transpired on the Senate floor. My friends on the other side have been the longest serving majority since 1980. We are enduring, some would say, the 7th consecutive year of their majority. Yet if someone were to take a close look at the strategy and tactics of the Senate Democratic leadership, they would think the roles were reversed.

Democrats are the majority. They have even enhanced their majority by breaking the rules of the Senate to give themselves more power. Indeed, they have not been a bit reluctant to overreach.

Part and parcel of having a majority in the Senate is control over the Senate's schedule and committees. Yet still we see what we saw today from my friends on the other side of the aisle.

Under the Senate rules, tax policy matters, including the tax extenders, are referred to the Senate Finance Committee. Trade adjustment assistance, which was also included in this bill, also falls under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee processed tax extenders in a bipartisan fashion last year and that legislation was eventually enacted into law. The committee has also been able, though without as much bipartisan support, to deal with the TAA in the recent past.

Yet now what do my friends want to do? They want to ignore the Senate rules, the expertise and proper role of the Finance Committee, and pass a complicated set of policies on the floor without discussion or debate. With regard to tax extenders, Finance Committee staff from both parties have, in only the past few days, started the process of developing tax extenders legislation.

To put it bluntly, the majority leader's partisan actions today make a sham of that deliberative, methodical, and constructive bipartisan effort.

Why are they afraid of going through regular order? They are the majority. Including my friend, the chairman, there are 13 Democrats on the Finance Committee and only 11 Republicans.

What are they afraid of? Don't they set the committee agenda? Don't they have the votes?

Political stunts, such as unanimous consent requests that are designed only to draw objections from the other side, may be good political fun for the proponents, they might even provide some good campaign fodder, but they don't solve any problems.

It is amazing to see this kind of activity from the Senate majority party when it controls the agenda both on the floor and in the committees. We might expect these kinds of actions from a frustrated minority party that feels shut out of its role in committees and on the floor, but here we have a role reversal.

I am currently a member of the minority party in the Senate, defending regular order, Senate customs, and the role of the committee system. I will reiterate my challenge to my friends in the Senate Democratic leadership: Why are you so afraid of regular order? Why not process this legislation in a careful, methodical, and transparent manner?

Being in the majority means being accountable. Today my friends on the other side of the aisle tried, once again, to avoid accountability in order to blame their own failings on Republicans. As the saying goes: That dog just won't hunt.

I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Republican leader.

Mr. McCONNELL. If I may, before the Senator from Utah leaves the floor, he correctly stated the state of the Senate today. It is not the same body it was only a few years ago in the way we are being treated. It is a very discouraging development, as we approach the end of the year, to see the way the Senate deteriorated under the current leadership.

I thank the senior Senator from Utah for pointing out that it was not too long ago that the two parties actually functioned on issues such as the majority leader was trying to ram through today without any committee consideration.

Mr. HATCH. The distinguished minority leader expresses it very well. I am appalled. I have only been here 37 years, but I have never seen the rules violated as they have been—frankly, violated in a way that is destructive to the Senate, not helpful or constructive to the Senate. This is just another illustration. Our side is getting very sick of it.

Mr. McCONNELL. I thank my friend from Utah.

STIFLING DISSENT

Earlier this year the Internal Revenue Service admitted responsibility for an incredible abuse of power. In the midst of an election season, it targeted and harassed Americans for the supposed crime of thinking differently. An agency with access to some of the most personal information of every tax-paying American betrayed their trust. In doing so, it showed the lengths to which this administration will go to stifle those who dissent from its policies. All of this was and remains a complete outrage.

It is the kind of thing we might expect from a banana republic or a third-world dictatorship, not the world's leading democracy. The worst part is we still don't know everything that happened or if it is still going on. That is because the bipartisan investigation into all of this still hasn't concluded.

It is unclear to me how seriously the White House is taking this investigation. In many ways it seems to have treated the scandal more as a public relations problem to get past than a serious problem to solve and now, get this, they expect the elected representatives of the people to roll over and rubberstamp a new Presidential nominee to head the IRS. They want Congress to forget what happened and simply move on. They expect us to clear the way tomorrow and let them ram through the President's new pick to run the IRS. The American people deserve answers about how and why this targeting happened. They deserve justice too.

I will not be supporting any nominee to lead this agency until the American people get the answers they deserve. Of course, the Democrats in charge of the Senate changed the rules a few weeks back in order to ensure they could get their way on nominees, no matter what the American people think. It is the same kind of attitude we have seen on the Defense bill, where the majority leader prevented other Members from offering amendments. They will do what they want, even if it means breaking the rules.

If John Koskinen does find himself confirmed tomorrow, I want him to know a few things. First, he should understand I don't hold any animus toward him personally. Under different circumstances, I might well have been able to support him. We had a good conversation when we met recently to discuss his nomination, but he is also someone I will be keeping a close watch on, as will the other members of my conference, as will the American people, because big challenges lie ahead for the next IRS Commissioner, no matter who he or she may be.

We expect the next IRS Commissioner to cooperate fully with the ongoing investigation into this scandal. We expect whoever is eventually confirmed to hold those who broke or bent the rules fully accountable. We expect the next Commissioner to fairly implement the laws he or she is charged with executing.

To his credit, the nominee has assured me he agrees with me on a topic I feel very strongly about—that the IRS should stay out of regulating political speech. Let me say that again. The IRS should stay out of regulating political speech. He told me himself he agreed with that, and I was pleased to hear it.

Were he to become Commissioner, I would expect him to oppose the extremely misguided proposed IRS rule that aims to overturn more than 50 years of settled law and practice by unfairly targeting the speech of those who criticize the administration while leaving its supporters untouched.

This proposed rule, which will redefine what social welfare means in order to target certain groups that seek to educate the public, would end up penalizing Federal, State, and local organizations for the supposed crime of providing information, much of it non-partisan or bipartisan. The goal is clear: to make it easier to push through the backdoor what congressional Democrats have been unable to pass through the front door, discriminatory policies that seek to silence those who dare to oppose them. It is just the latest in a long and troubling pattern of Chicago-style tactics under this administration, and it is exactly the kind of political meddling the next Commissioner needs to ensure never happens again.

Let us not forget, the IRS should be a boring place, an impartial agency of tax collectors, not the vanguard of the left.

The next Commissioner needs to see to it that the organization finally returns to its mission, and he or she needs to root out those who would have the IRS target Americans for the way they think.

Lastly, as I have told the nominee, I am deeply concerned about the IRS role in implementing ObamaCare. The fact is that ObamaCare represents a dramatic expansion of the use of the Tax Code to pick winners and losers. It gives the agency broad new responsibilities for enforcing ObamaCare's most onerous mandates and to hand out nearly $1 trillion in taxpayer subsidies. And in order to do all this, it will need to know who has insurance, penalize those who don't, and determine who is eligible for subsidies and how much they ought to receive—something the agency has a very troubled history in doing with other programs. If they get any of that wrong, they will need to come back and repossess subsidies after the fact.

In my view, the IRS doesn't have any business snooping even further into the lives of our constituents, especially at a time when it is already under a cloud of scandal. It is just one of the many reasons I opposed ObamaCare in the first place and why I continue to oppose it.

If the nominee is to become Commissioner, then at a minimum I expect him to hold the agency to the highest standards—the highest standards—when it comes to protecting the privacy of the people we all represent. I expect him to provide regular transparent updates to Congress on the status of implementation and to let us know of any problems as soon as they arise. The last thing we need is for the IRS to compound the pain it and ObamaCare have already inflicted upon the American people by allowing fraud and further mistreatment to happen under its watch. The IRS has done a lot to lose the trust of the American people. It will need to do a lot more to regain it.

Following the advice I just laid out will put the IRS on a better path. If this nominee ends up becoming the next Commissioner, that advice will form the criteria upon which his performance will be judged.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOOKER). The Senator from New Jersey.

TAX EXTENDERS ACT OF 2013

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I come to the floor to call attention to a critical provision in the Tax Extenders Act, which I wish had received consent because it is important for creating prosperity and economic opportunity in our country and giving certainty to businesses in order to achieve that goal. That Tax Extenders Act provides our Nation's most innovative businesses with some certainty as they plan their investments for next year.

Every year the Congress extends a very popular law that provides a tax credit to businesses for certain research expenses. This credit is important for a number of reasons. It creates jobs, it encourages more research, and it bolsters U.S. competitiveness.

Unfortunately, despite the efforts of a number of us here in the Congress—notably, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee—this credit is temporary and has been extended on what has been an annual basis. That is unfortunate because the lack of long-term certainty prevents businesses from fully relying on the credit when making their global investment decisions.

I know the Presiding Officer understands this very well, as the State of New Jersey has some of the leading innovative companies in the world that very often rely on the research and development tax credit to make those millions and sometimes billions of dollars' worth of investment in order to produce the next lifesaving or life-enhancing drugs or the next technology breakthrough.

In the meantime, at the very least, we can ensure the credit is extended. If we can't make it permanent, it should be extended in a timely fashion to give businesses confidence in putting more investment in research in the United States in 2014. This bill would extend the research and development tax credit for another year, and I sincerely hope we will be able to get this done very soon in order to maximize the credit's effectiveness and unlock that investment which creates economic opportunity and jobs and growth in our economy.

I yield for my colleague the senior Senator from Ohio to discuss another important provision in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Presiding Officer and the Senator from New Jersey, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington be allowed to speak following my comments on the extenders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am here to join my colleagues in asking for unanimous consent—which we will do formally later on—to pass the Tax Extenders Act of 2013.

The bill will do a number of important extensions, including—particularly important for my State—extending the health care tax credit or the HCTC. It is important that we extend it for workers and retirees who lose their jobs and benefits due to no fault of their own.

Extending the HCTC preserves a program that people in my home State of Ohio—such as Delphi salaried retirees, who worked hard and played by the rules—know, understand, and trust. These tax credits are set to expire in just 2 weeks, at the end of the year.

While affordable health insurance will be available on the health exchanges, one of the most important aspects of the Affordable Care Act—ObamaCare—extending the HCTC ensures that retirees who have already faced a number of transitions can keep insurance that is familiar to them while they learn about new options.

Extending the tax credit for 1 year is fiscally responsible. We could and should do more. We should improve the HCTC and make it permanent, as I proposed in legislation I introduced along with Senators ROCKEFELLER, STABENOW, HIRONO, and DONNELLY. But in the meantime, we could and should at the very least maintain this critical tax credit for a population that needs it desperately. That is what this bill does. That is why the Senate should move it soon by unanimous consent.

I would like to take a moment to emphasize how important the Tax Extenders Act of 2013 is on a number of other issues besides the HCTC and credits my friends have discussed.

Among other important measures, we should also move to extend the new markets tax credit and the low-income housing tax credit. These programs are oversubscribed and are able to help revitalize communities by leveraging tens of billions of dollars in private investments. They are among the best programs we have for economic development in Ohio and across the country. I strongly support that extension.

Finally, I would like to associate myself with Senator STABENOW in calling for unanimous consent to pass the Tax Extenders Act of 2013 in order to extend mortgage debt relief. Without this critical extension, homeowners who make modifications to their mortgage or receive loan forgiveness could face a crippling tax bill. Imagine that. After you have done a loan modification, you are taxed on whatever money you save. Imagine getting that tax bill. That is why the mortgage debt relief extender is so very important.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I wish to thank Leader REID, Chairman BAUCUS, Senator SCHUMER, Senator STABENOW, Senator WYDEN, Senator BROWN, and Senator MENENDEZ for coming to the floor to talk about this important issue of tax extenders and why we need to get them done now.

In the State of Washington taxpayers are opening the morning newspaper and finding the Seattle Times editorial entitled "Congress should extend the sales-tax deduction." The Seattle Times has been following this issue for years and knows that taxpayers are waiting to find out whether we can continue to deduct our sales tax from our Federal income tax obligation. As Washington is a State that doesn't have an income tax, we want parity with other States and we want to be able to deduct our sales tax as one of those taxes from our Federal tax obligations.

Every year millions of Washingtonians have to wait to find out whether that particular tax provision is going to be extended. I want to make it permanent, and I hope when we do tax reform we will be able to do so. But in the meantime we have to give certainty to the taxpayers in Washington State that as far as these important tax policies are concerned, Congress can act and get things done.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD that particular Seattle Times editorial.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Seattle Times, Dec. 18, 2013]

EDITORIAL: CONGRESS SHOULD EXTEND THE SALES-TAX DEDUCTION

Congress needs to end its magical thinking and pass a permanent federal income tax deduction for state and local sales tax.

Year after year, Washington state taxpayers are forced to play Congress' aggravating game of fantasy role-playing. Alas, there are no elixirs or elves, although there are a few ogres.

In this game, Congress pretends it will magically transform into a body capable of passing a comprehensive tax bill. Such a bill would almost assuredly include a permanent federal income-tax deduction for state and local sales taxes, on par with the existing permanent deduction for state income taxes. This matters because some states, such as Washington, have the former, but not the latter.

Instead, every year since 2004, Congress has passed a temporary extension of the sales-tax deduction. Next year, fantastical thinking goes, will be the big fix for the tax code.

Washington's delegation, led for years by U.S. Sen. MARIA CANTWELL, has tried to pop this absurdity. So too this year, with Rep. DOC HASTINGS, R-Pasco, hammering away. President Obama is on board, recommending a permanent sales-tax deduction. But the U.S. House left town on Friday for the year without so much as another temporary extension, effectively ending the deduction beginning in 2014.

This is big money for Washington state. An analysis by the Pew Charitable Trusts released this week shows Washington is the state most dependent on the sales-tax deduction, with 29 percent of filers in the Evergreen State claiming it. The top seven states all have limited or no state income taxes. Filers who claim the deduction typically save about $500 off their tax bill.

The fantasy game will likely resume on Jan. 6: Congress could pass a retroactive exemption, allowing deductions for the full 2014 calendar year. They could even pretend it had never expired, and, with a sprinkle of pixie dust, wipe clean the memory that the 113th U.S. Congress was the least productive in the history of the country, passing just 56 bills as of Friday.

Congress should end this game. Pass a permanent sales-tax deduction.

Ms. CANTWELL. At New Year's, as the ball drops in Times Square, a number of other tax provisions are going to expire, and the lapse of these important tax provisions makes it harder for Americans to invest in clean energy, to hire veterans, to pay for public transportation, and to build low-income housing.

As my colleague Senator BROWN was discussing, the Tax Extenders Act of 2013 is about providing predictability and certainty to citizens and to American businesses about tax benefits and investments.

On January 1 the commuter tax benefit will expire. That will mean an increase in household expenses for 2.7 million public transit commuters. In King County, which is the county Seattle is in, more than 1,600 employers use the commuter tax benefit to enable employees to get to and from work.

If you have ever been in the Puget Sound area, you know that transportation and traffic are big issues for us. So, obviously, trying to defer some of that traffic congestion by getting people into commuter transportation is a key part of our strategy. But if we take away the certainty and predictability of tax deductions with regard to commuting, we are going to make our transportation problems worse.

On New Year's Day the tax benefits for those employees who take public transit will be cut nearly in half, from $245 to $130 per month. We need to extend this benefit as a matter of tax fairness.

Transportation is the second largest expense in an American household. American families should be able to choose whether they want to drive or take public transit, and they shouldn't be punished because they are taking a bus or ferry or train.

Across Washington State we have seen firsthand how the other tax extenders help to actually create an environment of certainty and predictability for jobs and job creation. These are bipartisan principles we can all get behind.

Of particular importance to me, as I said, is the State and local sales tax deduction, which affects many people in our State. Individuals living in other States with a State income tax are not faced with these same challenges. Alaska, Florida, Nevada, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, and Wyoming are all in the same boat, and I am sure these citizens would want to have the sales tax deduction certainty and predictability. As a result, an average of $640 in deductions is real money back into people's pockets when they itemize those various tax benefits.

We hope this won't continue to be a burden placed on Washington State. We need these tax extenders now.

Additionally, there are other credits, such as the new market tax credit, which is a great program for encouraging investment in challenging areas of our country; the biodiesel tax credit; and the veterans work opportunity tax credit, which is a tax credit to encourage employers to hire veterans. We have had many of these events around Washington State, talking to employers who have successfully used this tax credit. There is also the low-income housing tax credit. I am sure the Presiding Officer probably has projects all over his State that have benefited from the low-income housing tax credit. This is a great incentive to get more affordable housing built in hard-to-serve areas and challenging areas because of high cost. I have already mentioned the commuter tax benefit. All of these are tied to job creation.

Instead of giving predictability and certainty on tax credits, here we are not getting our job done. We should get this done as soon as possible. It is time for Congress to extend these important provisions and to make plans accordingly.

I hope the IRS could be given the predictability and certainty as well in the new year about these provisions so that we are not delaying or affecting the tax season at the end of next year.

The time to act is now, and I hope my colleagues will help us get these measures—which are usually renewed in a bipartisan fashion—done as soon as possible.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, first I thank my friend and colleague from Washington for her passionate advocacy, and I join with her and other colleagues today in supporting the unanimous consent request to pass immediately the Tax Extenders Act. There is no reason not to get this done, as colleagues have said—absolutely none.

We are in a situation where there are critical tax policies that will directly affect families. Middle-class families across the country are going to be hit by a number of different policies. Small businesses, large businesses, and a number of different entities will be affected if we don't get this passed.

I would like to specifically talk about an urgent priority I have been offering, which we have been able to shepherd through a number of different times, which needs to get done as a part of this package or by itself, however we want to do it. We need to make sure struggling homeowners across the country—and in terms of all of the economy as well—are able to continue using tax policy to protect them from not only being hit with a mortgage problem that puts them underwater and struggling to keep their homes but an extra tax bill on top of it that makes absolutely no sense.

Let me explain that. At the end of the year, a law I offered back in 2007 to protect homeowners against unforeseen and unfair tax bills is set to expire. Before this law, when a portion of a distressed homeowner's mortgage was canceled—either in a loan workout with a bank, a short sale, or even a foreclosure in some instances—the IRS treated the canceled debt as taxable income. Think about that: You are already struggling with your home. You could lose your home. Or maybe you are able to refinance in some way, work with the bank, get a short sale, and then on top of that get a tax bill for whatever the value was of what you were able to work out. It makes absolutely no sense. It is, frankly, outrageous.

The IRS was telling homeowners that money they had already lost on their home was income, so we have essentially been correcting that since 2007 through a tax change. The IRS before that was taxing families on what is considered phantom income at the worst possible time for the family.

With the onslaught of the housing crisis, Congress recognized how critical it was to protect struggling homeowners from paying this kind of tax on mortgage debt relief. In 2007, we provided tax relief for homeowners by excluding mortgage forgiveness from their income for tax purposes. It made sense then, it makes sense now. It expires at the end of the year.

We came together on a bipartisan basis. We said to millions of working families, middle-class families struggling to keep a roof over their head for their families that: If you are struggling with an underwater mortgage, the IRS shouldn't kick you while you are down. You can seek relief without having to worry about incurring a massive tax bill.

This provision has aided millions of families and helped enable the housing market to begin to recover. However, in too many areas of the country and for far too many homeowners, the housing crisis is far from over. Nearly 6.5 million homeowners are still underwater in their mortgages. They owe more than their homes are worth. That includes 250,000 hard-working families in Michigan. Nearly 13 percent of homeowners nationally are underwater. Again, 18 percent are in Michigan—above the national average.

It is critical that we extend this provision, and it is very important it be done before the end of the year. It needs to be done ahead of time so homeowners know what the IRS rules are going to be in 2014, as they are literally making decisions today, tomorrow, the next day, over Christmas. They need to know. If we don't act, homeowners who are offered relief from their lenders or are thinking about a short sale won't know if they will be hit with a major tax bill as a result, and that will affect decisions being made.

On average, underwater homeowners owe $53,000 more on their mortgage than the market value of their homes. In some cases, of course, it is much more. For a typical middle-class family, that could mean a tax bill of more than $13,000. Merry Christmas. It is a $13,000 tax bill you shouldn't be paying as you are trying to figure out how to protect your home. Who would want to take that risk?

Brokers and housing counselors in Michigan have been asking me what they should be telling homeowners, and we need to act right now so we can tell them they don't have to worry about this.

This is not just about fairness for homeowners. This is about keeping the housing recovery alive. The last thing we want to do is to tax people into foreclosure, where they feel their only option is default and walking away from their home.

As we have seen in so many communities, foreclosures and vacant properties destabilize neighborhoods. I can walk from community to community in Michigan and show where that has happened. They push home values down. We can't let that happen at a time when the housing market and the economy are finally recovering. We all have a stake in extending this important tax protection for families.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the National Association of Realtors, and one from over 200 housing consumer and community organizations urging us to act now.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF REALTORS,

Washington, DC, September 27, 2013.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the more than one million members of the National Association of REALTORS®. I urge you to cosponsor S. 1187." This bipartisan legislation, introduced by Senators Stabenow and Heller, would extend the current law provisions that allow tax relief for homeowners when lenders forgive some portion of mortgage debt they owe. First enacted in 2007, this critical provision has helped millions of financially distressed American families. Unfortunately, the provision is temporary and is currently set to expire at the end of this year. Securing this extension is among our highest priorities for 2013.

Today's housing market is finally beginning to recover from a devastating multi-year decline. However, this recovery is uneven, and there are still too many homeowners who find themselves in foreclosure, contemplating a short sale, or attempting to have an existing loan restructured. Our estimates show about 9.6 million homeowners whose homes are still worth less than what they owe on them. This means that about 20 percent of all homeowners with mortgages in the U.S. are "under water." In addition, the Mortgage Bankers Association estimates there are still 1.45 million homes in the process of foreclosure. This is down from the peak of just over 2 million, but way above the average of about 430,000 from the pre-housing crisis period of between 2000 and 2006. It is clear that timely enactment of this bill is critical to the ongoing recovery of the housing market.

If S. 1187 is not enacted, hundreds of thousands of American families starting next January will have to pay income tax on "phantom income." They will owe tax on money they've already lost and will be required to pay that tax at a time of dire hardship, when they are least likely to have the means to pay it. Moreover, if the mortgage debt forgiveness provision is allowed to expire, many distressed homeowners may decide to take a pass on opportunities for short sales, opting instead for continued default until foreclosure or simply to walk away from the property. Either way, this would destabilize the communities where such homes are located, as foreclosed and vacant houses drive down values in the surrounding neighborhood.

We hope you will join Senators Stabenow and Heller to cosponsor S. 1187. Please contact Seth Hanlon with Senator Stabenow (seth.hanlon@stabenow.senate.gov or 4-4822) or Scott Riplinger with Senator Heller (scott.riplinger@heller.senate.gov or 4-6244) to be added.

Sincerely,

GARY THOMAS,
2013 President.

AMERICANS FOR FINANCIAL REFORM,
Washington, DC, December 6, 2013.

DEAR SENATOR, We write to urge you to support S. 1187, the Mortgage Forgiveness Tax Relief Act.

Extending the qualified principal residence indebtedness exclusion (QPRI) is of critical importance as we work to resolve the housing crisis. More than six years after the mortgage market imploded, we have still not returned to pre-2008 foreclosure levels. In the next year, many more homeowners will receive loan modifications with principal reduction under HAMP, the National Mortgage Settlement, or through private, proprietary modifications. The recent settlement with JP Morgan Chase, which requires a minimum of $1.5 billion in principal reductions, further ups the ante. Homeowners who need a principal reduction on their mortgage in order to avoid foreclosure should not face a tax bill. The imposition of tax in these circumstances undermines national housing policy.

The extension of QPRI will allow many homeowners to remain in their homes, paying on their mortgages, restoring some small measure of financial stability to their lives and to their communities. Extension of QPRI has received uncommonly wide bipartisan support across the entire spectrum of stakeholders.

We would ask that you go further, as well. QPRI has never reached the majority of homeowners who need principal reductions because QPRI is, as a practical matter, only available to homeowners receiving reductions on their purchase money mortgage. Homeowners who refinanced and received cash-out, or who paid off medical bills or student loans, or who took out a home equity loan to address deferred maintenance on their homes, cannot use QPRI to avoid paying income tax, even though they will have no additional income with which to pay the increased taxes and even if they remain deeply underwater after the loan modification. For example, under the terms of a recent principal reduction modification offered a Connecticut homeowner, the homeowner would, after the modification, owe nearly $250,000 more than the house is worth and face an increase in their annual taxes of over $10,000 a year, for three years, on a total annual income of only $71,000. In order to protect homeowners who need principal reductions from adverse tax consequences and to promote tax equity, QPRI should be expanded to include all residential mortgage debt forgiven due to a decrease in the value of the home or the homeowner's financial condition.

The Mortgage Debt Forgiveness Tax Relief Act expires on December 31, 2013. Principal reduction modifications entered into after this date, including those authorized by the recent settlement with JP Morgan Chase, will result in additional tax consequences for homeowners. Without an extension, far fewer modifications will be done and the modifications done will be less sustainable, with wide-reaching consequences for homeowners, the communities they live in, and our national economy. The settlements with some of the large financial institutions which are finally providing modifications with principal reductions for qualified homeowners should not end up penalizing the homeowners who have waited so long for assistance.

An extension of the Mortgage Debt Forgiveness Tax Relief Act cannot wait for a more global tax reform bill; it should be enacted swiftly.

Sincerely,

NATIONAL SIGNATORIES.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, this is a bipartisan initiative which I have introduced with Senator HELLER and 18 other bipartisan cosponsors. To my knowledge, it is not controversial.

There is no excuse not to act before we leave, and I urge colleagues to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Michigan for her heartfelt words. I couldn't agree with her more. I thank the majority leader and my colleagues from Ohio and New Jersey as well for recognizing the importance of this package of tax relief.

The Tax Extenders Act of 2013 would extend tax relief which business and middle-class families in my home State of New York and across the country depend on. They are noncontroversial. They have received bipartisan support in the past. And because of the great uncertainty over our economy, doing this quickly and not saying we will do it 3 months after they expire makes a great deal of sense. I know my colleagues on the other side of the aisle have objected to all of these. I hope they will reconsider, because for the good of the economy—which is just beginning to pick up a little bit—we need to do these extenders.

I am going to talk about four of them, but one is particularly critical because it doesn't work very well retroactively. The others do. That is why I urge my colleagues to reconsider and will ask for a separate UC before we leave here on this particular one because it has particular need right now, and that is the mass transit commuter tax benefit.

There are about 700,000 commuters in the New York metropolitan area, including from the Presiding Officer's home State, who take advantage of this current incentive. The commuter benefit currently covers up to $245 a month from a person's income to pay for their mass transit commute to and from work. So whether you take the subway, bus, train, or drive to work and park, the benefit provides significant savings.

The tradition, unfortunately, in this Senate and in this Congress was to treat mass transit as a second-class citizen, because the benefit traditionally had been significantly greater for those who drive and park than for those who take mass transit, and we have had serious problems.

First, until we changed it a few years back, the mass transit was half the benefit of parking and driving. Second, it was not indexed for inflation the way the parking benefit was. So if we let this provision expire, the mass transit benefit will revert to $130 a month, while those who drive and park will actually get an increase to $250 for 2014 because of inflation.

We cannot let these transit benefits for mass transit users get left behind. To do them is a win-win. It is a win, of course, for those who use mass transit—and we have so many in the New York area. It is also a win for drivers, because every person who is encouraged to use mass transit by this benefit will actually take a car off the road, remove some degree of congestion, and allow drivers to move more quickly. And, of course, it is a win for our environment, because mass transit is a far more effective way environmentally of moving things along.

So when the leader a few minutes ago requested the Senate pass the tax extenders act, I was disappointed it was blocked, and particularly disappointed that this benefit was blocked, because while we can do it retroactively, it is harder to implement than the others that are done retroactively, because most of them take effect when you pay your taxes in 2015, whereas this one takes effect month by month.

The proposal we are asking for is exactly the same as was included in the bipartisan negotiated tax extenders package considered by the Senate Finance Committee and passed by the Senate on a bipartisan basis for one additional year, through 2014. I hope we will consider it now, not retroactively later next year as we did last year. Employers need to plan whether they will provide the benefit. Commuters need to elect to take it. And as I said, it is done on a monthly basis. You can do it retroactively, but it is much harder.

I know we have lots of problems here between the parties, but we should not hold the mass transit commuters of America hostage. We should not make them second-class citizens. Their deduction is every bit as important, every bit as justifiable, as for those who drive and park. I hope my colleagues, before we adjourn this year for the Christmas holiday, would in the Christmas spirit extend this benefit.

Now I wish to talk about a few other credits which are also part of the package being blocked right now. One is the new market tax credit. Individuals and businesses across my State are counting on the new market tax credit. The new market credit program was created to stimulate private-sector investment in economically distressed communities. It has done exactly that. I have seen it work in Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, and the capital district in New York.

Over the first decade of the program, $20 billion in new market tax credit investment leveraged an additional $25 billion in capital from other sources to finance economic development in communities where financing might be difficult to come by.

The program is a proven job creator. Between 2003 and 2010, new market tax credit investments created over 500,000 jobs across the country. Again, it has always had bipartisan support. It is sort of a no-brainer. It should be continued.

I will now talk about the short line rail tax credit. It is a little like the new market tax credit in that it is a tax credit which encourages private investment and jobs.

We have short lines all across the country. They connect the main trunk lines on rail to the more isolated regions. But in those somewhat isolated regions are factories. We have opportunities for tourism, say, in the Adirondacks, and the short line rail tax credit helps maintain and renovate the short line rail system.

Rail is very prosperous these days. The big carriers can maintain the trunk lines very well. But it is harder to maintain the short line, and Congress in its wisdom decided to give a tax break for those. If you are unfamiliar, the short line rails are a web of tracks all over the country connecting local businesses and manufacturers to interstate rail systems. The unheralded links that bring raw materials into our businesses and connect them with other cities and supply chains must be maintained. Over 50 percent of rail track in my home State is short line rails. Approximately 550 short line railroads provide 50,000 miles of track in the country, and the credit is extremely useful in my State, financing hundreds of thousands of dollars of rail infrastructure investment annually. It is used all across the country. We have 42 bipartisan cosponsors in the Senate for this legislation. So I hope we will consider this one and pass it.

Finally, the IRA rollover. The IRA rollover provision is also set to expire, affecting so many retirees. They need to know whether it will be extended in order to plan their charitable giving in the coming year. If it isn't extended, many taxpayers over 70½ years of age will be surprised with a tax bill when they transfer funds from their IRA to their favorite charity in 2014. So this is important and, again, is one that truly is in the Christmas spirit.

In conclusion, businesses, families, retirees will pay the price if all of these valuable tax relief provisions, and many of the others mentioned by Senator REID, are not extended by the end of the year. I would hope, in the same spirit of comity that we passed the budget, we could come together and pass these extenders. They have always had bipartisan support. They are, after all, tax reductions. I know my colleagues on the other side of the aisle believe in tax reductions. To delay them and do them retroactively would be doing a disservice to our economy and to the millions of Americans who are working or seeking work in our country today.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, before he leaves the floor, I commend my colleague from New York for a very fine statement. He and I sit next to each other on the Finance Committee, and we are going to be working very closely together on these issues.

I have long felt that the best choice in terms of looking at these tax issues is comprehensive tax reform. The reality is the Tax Code in America is a dysfunctional mess. It is 100 years old at this point. I think it is pretty fair to say it looks its age every year.

When it comes to energy—and clearly a lot of Senators on both sides of the aisle have done a lot of work on this—my preference would be Congress would simplify the various energy provisions, replace the dozens of separate incentives for each energy technology with fewer technology-neutral, performance-based incentives that bring us to a more level playing field in the energy area—a more level playing field, and one where there would be certainty for those who are going to do the innovation—those in New Jersey, Oregon, and elsewhere, who have those kinds of breakthrough innovative ideas and who are telling us that they badly need to get off this roller coaster of extenders and have some real predictability for the important innovative work that needs to be done.

Those kinds of incentives should take into account important policy goals of domestic energy security and reducing this country's carbon footprint, while getting the Tax Code more out of the way and letting the free market decide which technologies break through and ultimately succeed. It is my view that what Chairman BAUCUS released yesterday—and he consulted with us extensively—certainly has some promising ideas in that regard.

With respect to where this debate is now, I think it is important to be clear about the challenge. It looks more and more like the other body has in effect decided to, if not slow walk tax reform, certainly take its time. Last month the news in Washington was full of headlines about various discussions among the House leaders. You got the sense—I will let them speak for themselves—on tax reform issues they apparently were going to take their foot off the gas. It does not seem the other body is poised to move forward any time soon on comprehensive tax reform. Because there is little indication the other body is going to move on this, my view is letting the incentives for the renewable energy resources—in particular solar and wind and other renewables and energy efficiency—in effect get thrown overboard, in effect sacrificed on this altar of inaction, would be a huge mistake. If we do that, we are talking about putting at risk thousands and thousands of American jobs in industries that are critical to our country's energy, environmental and economic security.

My view is that having these employers and having these innovative, cutting-edge technologies fall off the cliff would be a mistake. That is why it is critical Congress address and extend these key energy tax benefits as soon as possible.

Until the Congress takes the prudent step of broad-based reform of our tax system, the American people should not be left hanging. We ought to minimize the roller coaster of uncertainty that has been a drag on growth in recent years. Passing the Tax Extenders Act of 2013 and extending these important expiring provisions delivers a measure of confidence and continuity, and it builds a bridge between the current tax system and where all Members of Congress ought to hope we end up; that is, with a modern, progrowth Tax Code, worthy of the American economy and ready for the 21st century.

I have been interested in the subject for a number of years. I can briefly recount some of the history. Rahm Emanuel, now mayor of Chicago, and I introduced the first comprehensive reform effort when he was still in the other body. We were not even able to get a Republican to join us in that effort.

Then Senator Judd Gregg, our former colleague from New Hampshire who sat across from me on a sofa every week for 2 years—and I were able to come together with a tax reform proposal, much of which I continue to believe is valid. Then our current colleague Senator DAN COATS was willing to work with myself and Senator BEGICH and others and he made important contributions. We very much need to have a modern progrowth, pro-entrepreneurial Tax Code that is up to the challenges of the 21st century. That is my first choice.

That is not what is in front of us today. Clearly, when the House made the decision to pull back for various reasons, we were faced with the question of whether we were just going to sit by and, as a result of inaction, see these important renewable energy industries and the jobs they represent sacrificed. I hope the Congress, on a bipartisan basis, will say that is not acceptable and pass the Tax Extenders Act of 2013 on a bipartisan basis.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ENERGY SAVINGS AND INDUSTRIAL COMPETITIVENESS ACT

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. President, I rise, along with my colleague from New Hampshire Senator SHAHEEN to talk about the Energy Savings and Industrial Competitiveness Act. This is one of those pieces of legislation we ought to pass around here. It is bipartisan. It is good for the country. It is part of an energy plan for America that can help bring the jobs back, help fix our trade deficit, help make our manufacturers more competitive, help save taxpayers money, and actually help to clean the environment. That all sounds pretty good, doesn't it, and it does so without a single mandate. It does so without any new spending. It is fully offset, and, in fact, I would make the strong argument it is going to save taxpayers a lot of money. Why? Because putting energy efficiencies in place in the Federal Government, the biggest energy user in the world, we are going to see a lot of savings to U.S. taxpayers.

Over the last several months we have been working to clear a few last few hurdles that stand in the way of passing this legislation. I am pleased to say from what I am hearing from the other side of the aisle—Senator SHAHEEN can talk more about this—it looks as though we are going to have a good shot to move this early next year.

Before we leave for the holidays, I wanted to have a chance to talk about it a little bit. I know Senator SHAHEEN did, I know Senator WYDEN, who is here with us, the chairman, and Senator MURKOWSKI, the ranking member on energy, are all highly supportive of this legislation. After all, it got out of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee with a strong bipartisan vote, 19 to 3. This doesn't often happen with regard to energy policy around this place. This is one of those things where Republicans and Democrats alike can come together to do something good for our country.

It is also important we do it now because it gives the economy a shot in the arm at a time we need it. There is a lot of talk in this place about an "all of the above" energy strategy. To me, this fits perfectly with that. On this side of the aisle we talk a little more about the production side. In other words, we ought to be using more of the energy in the ground in America right now and I think we should. We should be producing more energy. At the same time, the energy we produce we should use more efficiently, and it has all those benefits we talked about earlier if we do that.

We still import a lot of oil. In combination with China it contributes to our trade deficit. In fact, the entire trade deficit one could say is due to energy imports and trade with China alone. By doing away with some of those energy imports, because we are using energy we have more efficiently here, we are going to see lower trade deficits.

The bill creates jobs and that is why it is supported by over 260 trade associations and companies, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, National Association of Manufacturers, and others. But it is also good for the environment, which is why the coalition also includes the Alliance to Save Energy, the Sierra Club, and others—again, a big reason this passed the Energy and Natural Resources Committee with a bipartisan vote of 19 to 3.

Simply put, the legislation the senior Senator from New Hampshire and I have worked on for 2½ years makes good environmental sense, makes good energy sense, makes good economic sense. It makes sense to help move this economy forward.

I visited with businesses and job creators all over my State of Ohio. They tell me the same thing. Energy efficiency is critical to their ability to compete. Think about it. We do live in a global economy. We live in an economy where we are competing in Ohio not just with Indiana but with India. As a result, we have to look at our cost of doing business, and one cost of doing business of course is labor. We don't want to compete with developing countries on labor rates. We want our labor rates to be good. We want benefits to be good.

Another aspect we could look at, of course, is the quality of our goods. We don't want to cut corners on the quality of the manufactured product we produce in this country. In fact, we want to make sure we produce the best in the world. But energy is an area where we can cut costs. By making our manufacturers more competitive by reducing their costs, we are going to be able to compete globally, add more jobs in the country, and again be able to help on our trade deficit. That is why this legislation is so important, because what the Federal Government can do is help the private sector take advantage of the best research that is out there, the best practices that are out there, so our companies can reduce their costs putting those savings toward expanding companies' plants and equipment, hiring more workers.

The proposals contained in this bill are very commonsense reforms needed for a long time. Again, there are no mandates on the private sector, none. In fact, many of our proposals come as a direct result of conversations we had with people in the private sector as to what they actually want and need. That is how we put this together.

It is also about how the Federal Government can become more energy efficient. We talked earlier about the fact that the Federal Government is the largest user of energy in the world. Think about that. Our bill basically says to the Federal Government: Why don't you start practicing what you preach. There is a lot of talk about green energy, green technology, and so on at the Federal Government level. But actually, it turns out the Federal Government itself is inefficient. We have lots of studies that show that.

More importantly, we have ideas to make the Federal Government more efficient and less wasteful. It directs the Department of Energy to issue recommendations that employ energy efficiency on everything from computer hardware to operational and maintenance processes, energy efficiency software, and power management tools. It also takes the commonsense step of allowing the General Services Administration to update building designs to meet efficiency standards that have been developed since those designs were finalized. They cannot do that now. And that makes no sense.

The Federal Government has been looking for places to tighten its belt. Energy efficiency is a very good place to start. It will save taxpayer money and help the environment in the process.

All this adds up to a piece of legislation that Americans across the political spectrum should be able to support, again fully offset, no mandates, and requires the Federal Government to become more efficient. All this makes sense.

What will the impact be? There is a recent study of our legislation that says that by 2025, the Shaheen-Portman legislation is estimated to aid in the creation of 136,000 new jobs while saving consumers $13.7 billion a year in reduced energy costs by the year 2030. It is the equivalent of taking millions of homes off the grid. It is the equivalent of the entire energy use of the State of Oklahoma, for instance, if we just put some of these commonsense efficiency standards in place.

This legislation is not everything everybody wanted. Some of the environmental groups would like to have gone further, and some of the business groups would probably like to see some other things to help them. But this is legislation that is sensible. It will make a difference. It is bipartisan. It can pass in the Senate significantly, and it can also be legislation that will be mirrored in the House of Representatives and passed.

There is a bicameral interest. A number of House Democrats and Republicans are on board. They are interested in our moving this legislation in part so they can then move legislation in the House and we can get it to the President's desk for his signature.

The Secretary of Energy has made energy efficiency one of his new priorities. So this is something we should and can do.

We all often lament the fact that there is not much bipartisanship around this place and not much is getting done; and it is true. It is true. The budget agreement was good this week. We had to do something. It is far from perfect, as I have said, even though in the end I voted for it because I think we need to move forward on this issue and have a budget for the first time in 4 years. But this is an example of bipartisan legislation that is positive and that can help move the country forward.

Any true, all-of-the-above energy strategy has to include not just producing more energy but using it more efficiently. Produce more, use less. That is good for jobs, good for taxpayers, and good for the environment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I hope we will hear from the Senator from New Hampshire who has been my partner in this effort for the past 2½ years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I am really pleased to be here on the floor today with, as the Senator from Ohio put it so well, my partner Senator PORTMAN in developing this energy efficiency legislation—the Energy Savings and Industrial Competitiveness Act, also known as Shaheen-Portman. It is a long name, but as the Senator from Ohio pointed out, it really goes a long way to address some of the energy challenges we face in this country. It is a win-win-win.

We heard a discussion earlier today about the importance of renewable energy as a way to create jobs. This is one of the most important things about our legislation. It does promote job creation. As the American Council for an Energy Efficient Economy said, 136,000 new jobs will be created by 2025 if we pass this legislation. By 2030, it would net an annual savings of almost $14 billion—$13.7 billion for consumers—and it would lower CO₂ emissions and other air pollutants by the equivalent of taking 22 million cars off the road.

So as Senator PORTMAN said so well, this is a win for job creation, it is a win for the environment, it is a win for national security, and it is a win for saving costs.

Senator PORTMAN talked about the importance of continuing bipartisan efforts as we saw this week with passing a budget. As did Senator PORTMAN, I supported that budget as well, despite some of the misgivings I had about it, but I think it was important to work together to move forward on addressing the issues we face in this country. That is exactly what the Energy Savings and Industrial Competitiveness Act would do. It is a bill that will create jobs, lower pollution, and save taxpayer money.

We had a great opportunity to pass this legislation back in September. Unfortunately, we saw some people come to the floor and object because of non-relevant amendments. But we have an opportunity to come back to it in the new year to try to pass it again. I am hoping we can do that.

One reason we are on the floor today is to talk about that second opportunity we are going to have. Senator PORTMAN and I have been working on some of the bipartisan amendments offered for the bill, and we are hopeful some of our colleagues who support those bipartisan amendments, who have authored them, will come on board with this legislation and help us get this passed in the new year.

As Senator PORTMAN said, to date, this legislation has more than 260 endorsements from groups that include business, the environment, think tanks, and trade associations. Supporters include everybody from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Natural Resources Defense Council, and the International Union of Painters and Allied Trades. I think any time we can get the Sierra Club and the American Chemistry Council supporting a piece of legislation, we know we have a good bill that can attract a lot of support. That is where we are in this legislation.

As we know, passage of the bill was delayed by a small group of Senators back in September. But I think there still remains a real interest in debating energy efficiency policy on the floor of the Senate. We have also heard from the House that both Representatives FRED UPTON, chair of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, and ED WHITFIELD, chair of the relevant subcommittee with jurisdiction over energy efficiency, have expressed interest in Shaheen-Portman and have said they will move energy efficiency legislation if the Senate passes a bill.

Since the bill was taken off the floor, Senator PORTMAN and I have continued to work with Chairman WYDEN. He was here a few minutes ago and plans to come back, hopefully, to speak to the legislation. We have been working with Ranking Member MURKOWSKI to incorporate some of those relevant bipartisan amendments that have been cleared by the committee, which I talked about a few minutes ago. If we can do that—if we can include those amendments—it would make the legislation even better, and it would secure additional support necessary to ensure passage. It would allow us, I hope, assuming the leadership agrees, to bring this bill back to the floor.

I am confident we can pass this legislation if we can get it back to the floor. It has bipartisan, bicameral support. It is exactly the kind of smart, affordable energy and jobs bill Congress needs to pass and the President needs to sign in order to spur private sector growth, in order to save on costs of energy, and in order to address some of the environmental issues we are facing.

So I thank Senator PORTMAN, as well as Chairman WYDEN and Ranking Member MURKOWSKI, for all of their help in working with us to promote this legislation and advance the bill. I really look forward to working with those 260 groups, which also include the Alliance to Save Energy—and it is important to recognize them for their support—to be able to bring this bill back, to get it through, and for the first time since 2007 to get some energy policy done in the Senate.

So I thank the Chair. Thanks to my colleague, Senator PORTMAN, we will be back after January.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

DAVIS NOMINATION

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I know we are awaiting the arrival of Senator JOHNSON.

I wish to take a moment to express my appreciation to the majority leader for including in the items we will be handling before we adjourn for Christmas the confirmation of Judge Brian Davis to the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida.

Judge Davis has been waiting for 2 years. This is a good example of how things have gone very slowly for a very deserving judge. He has been waiting for 658 days. He has the support of Senator RUBIO and myself. The American Bar Association has found him to be unanimously well qualified to serve on the Federal district court, and it is the ABA's highest rating.

Judge Davis is a native Floridian who grew up African American in segregated Jacksonville, FL, and despite those circumstances was accepted to Princeton for his college education. He returned later to the University of Florida Law School and then became a top prosecutor in Jacksonville and 20 years ago went on the bench as a State circuit judge. He has an impeccable record. He is, in a huge bipartisan way, embraced by the lawyers who have practiced in front of him. Yet it has taken 658 days.

I thank the majority leader and I thank the Senate. I thank Senator GRASSLEY, who initially had concerns, but when he looked at the record he had an open mind, and then he saw the character, the quality, the excellence of Judge Davis.

There are 37 judicial emergencies around the country, and two of them are in the Middle District of Florida where Judge Davis is, and three of them are in the Southern District of Florida. The courts are overburdened, and we need to fill these vacancies.

So I thank the Senate in advance for giving this good man, this excellent jurist, the opportunity to serve in a greater capacity, to serve his country. I want my colleagues to know this is a great Christmas present for me, but it is nothing compared to the Christmas present it is going to be for Judge Brian Davis and his family.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

YELLEN NOMINATION

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of Dr. Janet Yellen to be chair of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

As we continue to recover from the worst economic crisis since the Great Depression, we need a strong and thoughtful chairman of the Federal Reserve. We need a chair who has learned from our economic successes and mistakes over the past several decades. We need a chair who understands how monetary policy affects the everyday lives of Americans seeking employment or saving for retirement, and we need a chair who understands the importance of implementing Wall Street reform to promote financial stability. Dr. Yellen has all of these qualities, and she is ideally suited to be the next Fed chair.

Dr. Yellen's experience is unmatched. She currently serves as a member and vice chair of the Board of Governors. She previously served as a member of the Board of Governors in the 1990s. She was chair of President Clinton's Council of Economic Advisors, and she served 6 years as president of the San Francisco Fed.

Dr. Yellen also has an impressive academic record. She is a professor at Berkeley's Haas School of Business and was previously a professor at Harvard University, as well as a faculty member at the London School of Economics. Dr. Yellen graduated summa cum laude from Brown University and received her Ph.D. in economics from Yale.

Dr. Yellen has written numerous research papers on the labor market, unemployment, monetary policy, and the economy. Her expertise in these areas, including her understanding of the relationship between Fed policy and the labor market, would be valuable as we chart the course back to full employment.

But my colleagues do not have to take my word for it. Dr. Yellen's economic expertise is borne out by the facts. The New York Times recently noted that she was "the first Fed official, in 2005, to describe the rise in housing prices as a bubble that might damage the economy." She was also the first, in 2008, to say that "the economy had fallen into a recession."

The Wall Street Journal recently analyzed 700 predictions made between 2009 and 2012 in speeches and congressional testimony by 14 Federal Reserve policymakers and found Dr. Yellen was the most accurate.

At her confirmation hearing, Dr. Yellen displayed her impressive understanding of our complex 21st-century economy. She showed that she understands the complexities of Fed policymaking, and that—although abstract to many—monetary policy has ripple effects that affect the everyday lives of workers, savers, small businesses, and job seekers.

Dr. Yellen has proven through her extensive and impressive record in public service and academia that she is most qualified to be the next Chair of the Federal Reserve. We need her expertise at the helm of the Fed as our Nation continues to recover from the great recession, completes Wall Street reform rulemakings, and continues to enhance the stability of our financial sector. I am excited to cast my vote to confirm her as the first woman to serve as Chair of the Federal Reserve, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, before my colleague leaves the floor, I thank him for his leadership of the banking committee in the Senate for now several years and his commitment to try to find the right regulatory framework for the largest banks in our country as well as our community banks. I think the chairman has had a lot of challenges, as we all have, and I thank him, and for his strong advocacy of this particular nominee and for his help on so many issues, one of which I am going to speak about now with my colleagues from Florida and New York.

NATIONAL FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM

Mr. President, many of us on both sides of the aisle, from all parts of the country, have been working very hard for the last year—and some of us even longer than that—to try to present good, solid information to the Senate and to Congress about how important the National Flood Insurance Program is in many different dimensions, first of all for those who live along the coast, which is 60 percent of our population in the United States, and those who live on inland waterways, whether it is in the Presiding Officer's State of New Jersey or in States such as Pennsylvania, New Mexico, North Dakota—not near any ocean—or whether it is in States such as Florida or Louisiana that do sit, in Florida's case, on the Atlantic, and in our case the Gulf of Mexico.

This is a very important issue because our businesses and our families have to have a system of very strong levees, smart building codes, and ways of building and expanding our communities with a good flood insurance safety net, if you will, or security net, along with levees that do not break as they did in New Orleans in 52 places and three-quarters of a great international city of half a million people in a region of almost 1.2 million virtually went underwater. We have to do better than that because we are the greatest Nation in the world, we are the greatest economy, and this is an important issue for the Nation.

Some of us in places such as these spend a lot of time thinking about levee infrastructure, flood protection, all of the different pieces. It is not just one piece. Insurance is a very important piece, as my colleague from Florida will explain in a minute. He was a former insurance commissioner and knows this as well as anyone in this body. But flood insurance is one piece for Americans, some of whom live in low-lying areas, some in flood-prone areas, but they have been there a long time—like 300 years in our case. They did not just move down here in the 1980s. We have been here since the 1780s and the 1680s. So we have been here a long time as a country. We have built up a protection, if you will, of good, solid affordable flood insurance over the last 40 years. We have been building levees a long time. Thank goodness we are building more of them and building them better because our people need them and we could all use more of those. I try to provide funding for that every chance I can as a member of that Appropriations Committee.

Contrary to some of our critics, we are promoting very good policies in this country about smart growth, how to build stronger, higher, more resiliently. We are not blind to the challenges. But we have right now before this body a flood insurance bill that will fix the most pernicious parts of a "reform bill" that was passed 2 years ago called Biggert-Waters with all the best intentions, but it had disastrous—disastrous—consequences for people in New Jersey, Florida, New York, Louisiana, and Texas.

There are 5 million policies.

I want to put up one chart, and then I am going to turn it over to the Senators who want to join me. But because critics say this is just a Louisiana issue or this is just a Florida issue or this is really not about anything other than coastal States, let me put that to rest. That is not factual. It is a damaging myth. You can see here on this chart that all of the flood maps in effect are in purple. These are Mardi Gras colors in honor of our season coming up after Christmas. But these are the flood maps in purple that exist as of July 12. These are proposed flood maps in green and new flood maps in yellow. Literally, there will not be a State in the Union—not one State in the Union; not one—that is exempt from the requirements of Biggert-Waters to produce new flood maps, some of which have not been produced for decades, putting communities that have never been in a flood zone, in a flood zone and then having these pernicious pieces of Biggert-Waters say: OK, you have never flooded, you have never been in a flood zone, but let me tell you, when you put your house up for sale, your rates are going to go up 10 percent. It is like stealing, taking—whatever word you want to call it—the equity right out of someone's home. It is unconscionable, and it must be fixed now—not a year from now but now. These rates have gone up in October, in January.

So I am here to say a couple of things. This is a national issue, No. 1. No. 2, we are very proud of putting together a great coalition. The leaders of this coalition are Senator MENENDEZ from New Jersey, the Presiding Officer's senior Senator, who has worked so hard; and our Republican leader, for whom everyone has a lot of respect, is JOHNNY ISAKSON from Georgia, who is recognized as an expert in the real estate markets of this country. It is his expertise. We should listen to him when he says real estate markets are going to take a terrible hit if we cannot fix this.

The final point is that this is not just to help homeowners and businesses; it is also to save the program because, as CHUCK SCHUMER, the Senator from New York, has said many times, if we do not fix this, not only will people not be able to afford the insurance but because they cannot, the program will collapse under its own weight of inaccessibility and unaffordability, and then the taxpayers are going to pick up a bigger tab.

We could not make any clearer, stronger arguments. A coalition has come together. We have 60 votes.

I see my colleagues from Florida and New York. I do not know what their schedules are in terms of time. The Senator from Florida is well-versed. Again, as through the Chair, the Senator from Florida served, before being a Senator, as an insurance commissioner. I would like for him to add a word because our goal today is to acknowledge that, unfortunately, because of the difficulties we are having on process, we are not able to get a vote, it looks like, before we leave, but we are under the understanding—and I want to ask the Senator—that Leader REID has agreed to call this bill up for a vote, for a cloture vote, in which we have accepted the 60-vote threshold. We believe we actually have more than 60 votes. We just need to get it up when we come back in early January.

Through the Chair, is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is my understanding. But in the newfound felicity and spirit of the season, wouldn't you think that since the real estate market along the coast has dried up—why? Because if you cannot get flood insurance because you cannot afford it, you cannot get a mortgage. If you cannot get a mortgage, there are a lot of folks who cannot buy a house. By the way, those who need to sell their houses cannot get the buyers. So what happens to the real estate market in places such as the Tampa Bay region of Florida, as chronicled by the Tampa Bay Times—an example that a homeowner's present flood insurance premium is $4,000; under the new bill, $44,000. That is unaffordable.

What we are merely asking for is that FEMA do an affordability study while this is delayed for a few years to determine what is the affordability.

If this is supposed to be actuarially sound, then that came as a result of huge losses to the program because of an unusual thing—not a hurricane called Katrina but because the waters rose, it put pressure on the dikes and it breached the levees, and that flooded the bowl called New Orleans, and that caused lots of economic loss, and they are figuring all of that in the flood insurance premiums. And oh, by the way, 40 percent of all those flood insurance policies are in my State of Florida.

Before we hear from the Senator from New York, I want to say this: Floods come from many sources. Obviously, floods come from hurricanes. People used to think hurricanes were Florida's problem. Well, now we know, because of the experience on the gulf coast, they can do an awful lot of damage in many different ways.

But oh, by the way, people up in the Northeast suddenly realized hurricanes are a problem. Why? Because the ocean temperature is rising, and when the water gets warmer, the frequency of the storms is more and the ferocity of the storms is greater. Thus, in a time when it is normally cool water, cold air temperature, all of a sudden we have a major storm that comes to a part of the country that is completely unprepared, and now not only do you have all the damage from the water and the wind—and think what happened all the way up into New England, all the way up into Vermont. You heard about all those rivers that suddenly completely overran and inundated that little town with a lot of water, and they are calling this a thousand-year storm.

But the 1,000-year storm happened a year ago. I am not here to speak about climate change, on which I certainly think we better get our heads out of the sand. I am here to talk about an immediate problem for the people all up and down the coasts of the United States; that is, the affordability of flood insurance. Why would not our colleagues give us a little Christmas present since we have over 60 votes in the Senate, and let's give some hope to those homeowners back home who now cannot afford flood insurance.

I want to hear from the Senator from New York who has been a leader, and his State has suffered. Fortunately, it is going to take folks like him and the great Senator from Louisiana to keep beating this drum to bring some relief to our people who are desperate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I want to echo the outstanding words of my colleagues from both Florida and Louisiana. They echo the views of many. Everyone says the public is exasperated with the Congress. Our approval ratings are low. They are. Why? It is simply because when huge problems occur that affect ordinary people, we seem paralyzed. What is happening with flood insurance embodies what I am talking about. Average homeowners who purchased flood insurance through the years for $800, $1,000, are now being hit with bills of $4,000, $5,000, $6,000. If you are rich, that is nothing. But the vast majority of people who have flood insurance, whether they live on the oceans in my State or the State of the Senator from Florida or on the gulf of the State of the Senator from Louisiana or on the bodies of water such as the Mississippi or Missouri Rivers, are not wealthy people. You tell them all of a sudden out of the clear blue they have to pay $4,000, $5,000, $6,000 for flood insurance, they do not know what to do. It is a crisis for them. They say to us: Congress, fix this.

This is what we are supposed to do. So in their wisdom, the Senator from New Jersey, the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Florida, myself, many others have come up with a proposal that says: We know flood insurance is broken, but we do not want to see it broken on the backs of average homeowners. We have a plan that will delay these increases until 2017, while FEMA studies affordability, and while Congress reexamines this issue.

There was an affordability study in Biggert-Waters. Somehow FEMA ignored it. We are not letting that happen. So that is why we have to act here. There are three types of people who are in danger. The first are those who know or are about to know they are going to be hit. They have flood insurance already and their costs are going to go way up. The vast majority are middle-class people.

The second are those who will be told: Your insurance will not go up, but when you sell your home it is going to go way up. Any bureaucrat who tells us, well, that does not affect the average person—it affects the value of their home immediately. But it also says they cannot sell their home. In my area, if flood insurance is going to be $8,000 or $10,000 or even $20,000 a year, who is going to buy the home, except at a greatly reduced value?

But, my colleagues, there is a third group. They do not know who they are. FEMA is changing flood maps throughout the country. They will get to your State, unless maybe Utah or a State such as that does not have any flood insurance. I do not know. But the vast majority of our States that either bound the Great Lakes, the Pacific Ocean, the Atlantic Ocean, the gulf, the great rivers—the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, the Platte—are all going to be affected.

A year from now your constituents are going to come to you and say: Stop this. This will affect the overwhelming majority of States and Senators, even if they do not know it now. So our solution is not an ideological solution, it is not a solution that picks one side or the other. It says: Put a moratorium on this until we can figure it out in the right way that does not put the burden of flood insurance solely on the backs of people who cannot afford it—average folks.

In my State—my good friend from Florida mentioned it—we have people who have struggled to fix their homes from Sandy, spending tens, even hundreds of thousands of dollars. Then all of a sudden they are hit with a huge flood insurance bill. They are already in debt.

That is not fair. Just when they move back finally into their homes, FEMA comes in and tells them in a year or two they cannot afford to live in those homes they fixed. That is intolerable.

The bottom line is simple. We have a good piece of legislation. We would hope we could pass it by unanimous consent, as my colleagues from Florida and Louisiana said, as a nice Christmas—not present, because it is not a present. These are people who deserve to have this. But it is a nice Christmas thought. But if not, we will come back in January. That is my expectation. That is what the leader has told us. We are willing to go through a cloture vote and bring this legislation to the floor. We expect and hope that we will get the same kind of bipartisan support that has helped us put this bill together with Senators from every part of the country.

I would say to homeowners: It is my hope and prayer and indeed expectation, although around here expectations sometimes are not met, that we will have this bill on the floor and then passed so that homeowners, millions of homeowners across America, can breathe a sigh of relief; they can stay in their homes, and flood insurance will be amended in the right way.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHUMER. I would be happy to yield for a question.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Through the Chair, could the Senator explain a little bit more clearly for so many people who are listening to what we are saying this morning, because the Senator has been around here a while in leadership. When the leader, HARRY REID, rule XIV's a piece of legislation, how sure are we that we are going to get what is required and can we be—I have been saying I am very confident this vote will occur sometime in a week or two when we get back. What is the Senator's understanding?

Mr. SCHUMER. My understanding is just that, that in the—even possibly in the first week when we get back, that the leader, having rule XIV'd it, which means he can bring it to the floor right away, can put it on the floor and, of course, then people can demand—those opposed—that we invoke cloture so we can proceed to the bill and then vote on the bill. But if we have 60 votes, we will be able to meet that cloture barrier. So it is my understanding the plan is to actually do it as soon in January as the first week we get back, which I believe is January 6. If we cannot do it then, we will be pushing very hard to do it shortly thereafter.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Is the Senator aware of a comparable effort going on in the House? The Senator has been at a couple of news conferences with us. Could the Senator maybe speak for a minute to explain, does he think there is pretty good support building in the House of Representatives from the Senator's delegation in New York as well as other delegations the Senator might be aware of?

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank my colleague for that question. Exactly. This is affecting so many people in so many parts of the country. It does not affect just Democrats or Republicans, conservatives or moderates, Independents or liberals. The support is building daily. Senators and Congress Members are getting calls from their constituents pleading with them to do something.

So it is my view, it is my understanding that the House is undertaking a very similar piece of legislation. I would expect it would pass the House, where they do not even need the 60-vote majority. I know in my delegation it has bipartisan support. As I understand it, in most delegations it has bipartisan support.

Ms. LANDRIEU. To the Senator from Florida, through the Chair, what is the Senator's understanding of the Florida delegation? The Senator has one of the largest States in the Union and has one of the largest delegations. Is it something that the Senator is sensing people are becoming more and more aware of, not just from the coastal counties but throughout all parts of Florida?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, in response to the Senator, the Florida delegation is clearly united in recognizing that if you cannot sell your home because you cannot get a mortgage, because the bank requires flood insurance, and you cannot afford the flood insurance, the real estate market starts to dry up. In a State such as Florida, the real estate market is one of the main economic engines that fuel the ability of people to have work and to be able to support their families. As a result, we are seeing in places along the coast with—taking examples: That was a tenfold increase from 4,000 to 44,000, a flood insurance premium, told by the Tampa Bay Times. It is not only ridiculous, it is stunning to the point that people cannot believe something is facing them in their personal lives with their homes that could be so easily taken care of if we could get the approvals to get the legislation we already have 60 votes or more for. They cannot believe people are opposing bringing up this legislation to fix what is so obviously in need of fixing.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the Senator from Florida. I would ask unanimous consent if we want to extend our colloquy, but I think I am going to wrap up with a few remarks for about 5 minutes.

I see the Senator from Texas on the floor and he may want to speak. But let me put a couple of startling facts in the RECORD.

There are over 450 counties, parishes, and boroughs which are located directly on open oceans, the Great Lakes, major estuaries, or coastal flood plains. We know from our geography that there are over 3,144 counties—parishes in our case, boroughs in some—in the country. But this is the important fact here. In 2010, these coastal counties contributed more than $8.3 trillion, which is 55 percent of the national economy. I want to underscore that and highlight its importance. We have 3,100 counties. But there is a subset of those counties which is mostly affected by this particular issue, flood control and flood protection, that produces 55 percent of the GDP for this country.

So, yes, this is a homeowner's issue, it is a middle-class issue, it is: They are suffering, let's relieve the pain. But it is also: We better wake up and realize the economic impact this is going to have on the entire country if this is not fixed. This is not about millionaires on a beach. It is about the future of the economic strength of America.

I cannot be more emphatic about that. It is not overstating our challenge. This is not about millionaires. It is about the middle class. It is about the middle class who need affordable insurance so they can live where they need to work—let me say that again: Live where they need to work—not rest where they need to vacation. There is a big myth here that flood insurance is about resting on vacation.

Flood insurance is about working hard where you need to work to keep this economy moving forward. Nothing could be more clear than in the State of Louisiana, but this is true in Texas, this is true in New Jersey, this is true in many places, in California, in our country.

People live near the water to harvest seafood, to produce domestic energy, to manufacture and transport the goods necessary to keep this economy moving.

If we shut down these communities because of a capricious law such as this that was not well thought through, that was not fully debated the way it should have been throughout this Congress, we are jeopardizing the dreams of not only these particular homeowners and business owners, but—and people will hear this from me—we are jeopardizing the future of the economy in the United States.

We cannot let this get any further than it has gone or we will start feeling the ramifications. Again, this is not flood insurance for people resting on vacation. This is flood insurance for people working every day because they need to live where they work to do the jobs our economy requires.

I showed this flood map graph a few minutes ago, which is where all of the flood maps are going to be. No State is exempt, not one—clustered in some areas, more than others, but not one State is exempt. Heads up to Oregon, Washington, California, Pennsylvania, Michigan, of course, the east coast, the gulf coast, and everywhere in between.

But this is where levees are. I know a lot about levees. Unfortunately, I have to know a lot about them because we have a lot of them. They break too often and breach too often. I am trying to figure out ways to build them higher and better with nickels and dimes and trying to piece them together. I was surprised there are levees in other parts of the country that I was not aware of. This is a big issue, flood protection, particularly with our sea levels rising, the weather patterns getting more erratic, flash floods happening in deserts.

Colorado is not even around an ocean. How could we have millionaires on a beach when there is no beach? I mean, there are millionaires in Colorado, but there is no ocean. This visual some critics have painted is so wrong. It is so distorted.

What Colorado does have—and look at Arizona—they have these flash floods, important flood controls for people who even live in dry parts of our country. We have to fix this.

The great news is we have a bill that is broadly supported by both Republicans and Democrats. I am sorry there is seemingly one objection from the other side, a Republican Senator from Idaho. Many colleagues are talking with him about lifting his objections. If he has suggestions for amendments, we are flexible, we are open to hear any reasonable suggestions.

We have more than 60 votes. Around here, in the old days, when we had 60 votes, we could do a lot.

Unfortunately, there are some people who think we have to have 100 votes to do anything, and that is a big problem. It is a big problem for our democracy because that is not the way it was structured to be.

However, we are going to continue to work. I thank the coalition. I wish to read a couple of things into the RECORD, and I will turn the floor over in a minute.

I have on my Web site—and I have encouraged Senators to have "My Home My Story." There are literally hundreds every day that come into my office with a picture of the house and their individual stories. I think it is worth reading one or two into the RECORD briefly.

This is from the New Orleans area where there are 303,000 policies. This particular story is from Jefferson Parish, a suburb of New Orleans, which has the most insurance policies of any parish of our State.

Richard of Metairie writes:

My wife and I purchased it as our first and so far only house in the fall of 1997.

We put down roots, befriended our neighbors, hosted family gatherings, and celebrated the birth of our daughter.

If the rate increases we're hearing about go forward, you will have succeeded in doing what Katrina didn't; break the back of Southeast Louisiana.

Homes will be unsellable, businesses will shutter, banks will fail from the doubtless tens of thousands of defaults that will occur as people simply walk away from their now worthless homes.

I don't know how much clearer we could be, and this is not an exaggeration. The data shows it. The coalition has proved it. We are building tremendous support, and I can only hope we vote as soon as possible within the first week of coming back.

Wendy of Metairie, another person from Jefferson Parish, says:

I built my house 3 feet above required base flood elevation in 1998.

Now with elimination of grandfathering, I will be paying $28,000 per year for flood insurance.

Why should we be penalized for building our houses in compliance?

That is a very good question, and I don't have an answer for her other than to say we hear you and we are changing the law. It was poorly designed, it can be fixed, and it should be fixed.

Finally, from Baton Rouge, which is our capital city now, because so many people were literally flooded out of New Orleans in the southeastern part of the State. Baton Rouge is now the largest city, almost 500,000 people.

Ken writes:

My wife and I live on Social Security and a small annuity from my work.

We have lived in this house for 37 years.

All our bills take almost all the income.

We constantly look at our finances to see if there is anything else we can cut or reduce.

An increase in flood insurance may increase my house note beyond our capacity to pay for it.

Brian of Baton Rouge writes:

My house was built in 1969 before there were flood maps.

I accepted a job in TN, I thought my house would sell.

I have a neighbor who wants to buy my house, but they have withdrawn their offer since they found out how much flood insurance will be.

Flood insurance rate hikes on this single property affects 3 families; my family, the family I want to buy from, and the family that wants to buy my house.

I wish to underscore this and then I will end. I wish everyone to get a picture of the 5 million people caught in this web. We think: Well, we have a lot of people in America with 350 million. This is 5 million. Let's say 2 per house. That is only 10 million. This is a very small number compared to 350. Maybe we don't need to pay attention to the 10 million people.

But every home has a buyer and a seller. Most every home has a bank. Most every home has a worker or two or sometimes three in that house. It is affecting so many businesses. If this gentleman can't get his finances straight, he will leave his job in Tennessee. The business in Tennessee that is not anywhere near an ocean will be affected.

I know I sound a little bit like a broken record, and I don't mean to, but this is serious for the whole country.

I wish to end by thanking HARRY REID for understanding, for hearing us amidst all of the yelling and screaming that is going on around here about this and that. He has been able to focus and understand that this is an important bill for the country. He has agreed to use his power—which he has only; only the leader has this power—to pull the bill from the calendar. He has promised us he will do that the first week we get back, and then it is our job to deliver the 60 votes to pass it. If we don't get 60 votes, the bill will fail and it will be a terrible shame.

I don't think this bill will fail because I know how important this issue is for every single Member of this Senate. I know they are hearing from their middle-class homeowners, lower income homeowners, businesses, bankers, and realtors. All I can say is we are going to have to work over the holidays—unfortunately, we would like to rest but no rest for the weary—and we are going to have to work hard to convince many people so we have a successful vote when we get back.

I have hundreds of personal requests I received. I know Senator VITTER has received the same. I thank him for his help as well. Again, this is a Democrat and Republican working together to get the job done.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. BALDWIN). The Republican whip.

Mr. CORNYN. As we all learned in civics class in high school, the purpose of the Senate was to ensure that every State in the Nation had at least two votes on important matters that might affect not only the country generally but also our States. Some of us represent small States and some of us represent large States.

I am privileged to represent one that has 26 million people in it, and we are growing by roughly 1,000 or more people a day. They are moving to Texas because that is where the jobs are. Our economy is prospering relative to the rest of the country because, as I like to tell my friends in this Chamber from time to time, we still believe in the free enterprise system in Texas and the private sector that creates jobs, opportunities, and where people can move to pursue their American dream.

Regardless of which party we come from or which part of the country we come from or who controls this Chamber, the Senate has historically recognized two fundamental rights; the right to debate legislation and the right to offer amendments to legislation.

When those rights are denied, our constituents—particularly of those of us who are serving in the minority—are essentially severed. They lose their voice. They lose their opportunity to have their views represented in the amendment process, the shaping of legislation that could be improved or not.

We know that when the minority voice is quashed—as this majority leader has done time and time again—and when minority rights are trampled, the Senate becomes a very different place indeed. We have become a place where mistakes get made, where purely partisan legislation is passed. The most obvious current example is ObamaCare, which was jammed through this body on a party-line vote in the House and in the Senate.

People are finding out that if they like what they have, they can't keep it. Families of four will not see their premiums go down by $2,500. That is the kind of thing that happens when the majority succumbs to the temptation to jam things through without giving the back-and-forth opportunity, the deliberation that national legislation—legislation that will affect all 300-plus million Americans—should have.

When the majority leader denies those rights and those opportunities or those sorts of checks, balances, and the natural correction that comes from building consensus in the Senate and instead resorts to a partisan power play, mistakes get made and people get hurt.

Since the majority leader has taken that role, Senator REID, the senior Senator from Nevada, has filled the amendment tree more than 70 times.

For those who get bored at the concept of Senate procedure and how the Senate's rules actually work, I wish to say what that means is effectively the majority leader has denied the opportunity to offer any amendments to legislation by "filling the amendment tree." That is the way he actually accomplishes that.

By comparison to this majority leader who has done it more than 70 times since he has been majority leader, the previous majority leader, Senator Bill Frist of Tennessee, did it 12 times in 4 years. Before him, majority leader Tom Daschle only did it once in 1½ years. Majority leader Trent Lott of Mississippi did it 10 times in his 5-year tenure as majority leader of the Senate. Majority leader George Mitchell did it only three times in 6 years and majority leader Robert C. Byrd did it only three times in 2 years.

In other words, this used to be an extraordinarily rare use of the tool that the majority leader has to block amendments to legislation. Majority leader Bob Dole did it seven times in 3½ years, about once every 6 months.

By contrast, Majority Leader REID has done it 70 times. What recourse does the minority have when they are blocked out of the legislative process on the Senate floor? The only tool we have available to us is to block cloture because it still takes 60 votes to get to a final passage of legislation. But when the minority exercises its rights, then we are called obstructionists. Because the majority leader has blocked any amendments and denied us an opportunity to have a choice in shaping legislation, the only recourse we have is to say that 41 Republicans will stick together and block the legislation, and, hopefully, set up a negotiation. But what happens more often than not is it is a politically posturing exercise and the majority leader will pull the bill down and rail against the minority as obstructionists. Well, this is a manufactured crisis.

This place did not always work the way it does now. Last month this resulted in an unprecedented power grab by our friends across the aisle when they violated the Senate rules in order to further weaken the rights of the minority and to help President Obama turn the second most important court in the Nation into a liberal rubberstamp. I am talking about the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals. Notwithstanding the fact this court has the lightest caseload of any of the circuit courts, the intermediary appellate courts in the Nation, it literally doesn't have enough work to do, while there are other judicial emergencies both at the district court and at the appeals court level that need additional judges—but because this court is the one that reviews many of the administrative regulations issued by the Department of Labor, the Environmental Protection Agency—in other words, they are the ones that will do the review of ObamaCare regulations or Dodd-Frank regulations—the President and his allies saw this as an essential way to stack the court in a way that will rubberstamp his agenda.

So what happened is the majority leader decided to further erode or basically deny the minority any right in the process for executive nominations and judicial nominations and said: You know what. With 51 Democratic votes, we can do anything we want—anything—when it comes to nominations.

By using the so-called nuclear option, as it has been called, the majority leader and his allies went against the advice of some pretty wise Members who have been in the Senate for a long time, and I am thinking particularly about the Senator from Michigan, Senator LEVIN, who has served for six terms in the Senate and who is going to be retiring at the end of this next term.

Prior to that vote, Senator LEVIN warned his fellow Democrats not to take up the nuclear option, to leave it on the table and to walk away, because he said pursuing the nuclear option in this manner removes an important check on majority overreach, which is central to our system of government. It is the checks and balances that are so important that Senator LEVIN was talking about.

I know most people get bored when talking about the process by which things happen here or don't happen or the Senate rules, but they happen to be pretty important to our democracy and demonstrating respect for minority rights. And when minority rights aren't respected, we make some pretty bad mistakes, and I am thinking about two of them right now.

We are currently debating the Defense authorization bill, which is a very important piece of legislation, because this is the authorization given to our national security agencies, particularly the Department of Defense, to be able to function and to keep our country safe. Yet once again, the majority leader is refusing any amendments to this underlying piece of legislation, including an amendment which would address the military pension cuts that were part of the recent budget agreement that passed yesterday.

It was amazing to hear the mock horror of people in this Chamber when they found out that our Active-Duty military were being discriminated against and punished by the budget agreement that was passed yesterday to the tune of roughly $6 billion over 10 years. In other words, among everybody else in the Federal Government, they were singled out for worse treatment and were not grandfathered in to the pension reforms that were part of this deal for other Federal Government employees.

This is one of the things that happens when things get jammed through: Mistakes are made and people get hurt. In this instance, the people who happen to get hurt are those who wear the uniform of the U.S. military and who have served with great hardship in places such as Afghanistan and Iraq. Some of these people have suffered the wounds of war—lost a leg, lost an arm, suffered traumatic brain injury or post-traumatic stress syndrome. What is the majority leader's answer to our attempt to fix that mistake in that legislation? You are out of luck. And not just those of us who are trying to fix it, he is telling those wounded warriors: You are out of luck.

So when power plays take place in the Senate, when minority rights are denied and an opportunity to amend and improve and fix mistakes in legislation because of this power play by the majority leader, and the majority party that supports him, people get hurt. These pension cuts will impact veterans across the country. As I said, they will even impact combat wounded veterans who have been medically retired. This is a provision my colleague from Washington State, the Senate Budget Committee chair, called a technical error.

As I said, not surprisingly, Members of both parties have come to the floor since this was highlighted and they have called either for rescinding those cuts to the pension benefits of our Active-Duty members or those who have been medically retired or they have proposed to come up with alternative measures to reduce the deficit by a commensurate amount. At the very least, the military retirees who have already sacrificed so much for our country should have been exempted. Well, they weren't.

I am encouraged there has been some talk across the aisle about acknowledging the problem and the mistake. Yet instead of taking action today or yesterday, when we passed the budget deal that discriminated against other Active-Duty military, we were told: Just wait until next month; we will take care of it then.

It sort of reminds me of why the most feared words in the English language are sometimes said to be: Don't worry, we are from the government. We are here to help.

These wounded warriors need more than our rhetoric. They need our action. And they are the ones who are being punished by the strong-arm tactics of the majority leader and the majority party. Why should they have to wait? We know things don't always happen on schedule around here. There is time as the world knows it, and then there is Senate time, and those are very different things.

Shouldn't we do everything possible now, today, to make sure these folks have peace of mind, particularly during this season of the year? If it was a technical error to include military retirees in the pension cuts, why are we not fixing the problem today? There is no good reason. There is zero good reason.

These kinds of strong-arm tactics need to be called out. Because while some people seem to think these are technical rules of the Senate and they are bored by them—the press doesn't want to write any stories about them—what I am here to say is that people get hurt by hyper partisanship and strong-arm tactics in the Senate. People get hurt.

Let me tell you about some other folks who are being shown disrespect as a result of the strong-arm tactics by the majority leader. I have introduced legislation that would allow for medals to be awarded to members of the armed services and civilian employees of the Department of Defense who were killed or wounded in an attack perpetrated by a home-grown violent extremist who was inspired or motivated by a foreign terrorist organization.

Of course, what I am talking about is what happened about 4 years ago at Fort Hood, TX, when MAJ Nidal Hasan, who had been radicalized by a Muslim cleric the President subsequently put on his kill list, and who was killed in a drone attack in Yemen—Anwar al-Awlaqi. Nidal Hasan had communicated with al-Awlaqi more than 20 different times by email, and over the years he had shown increasing tendencies to blame the United States for what was happening in the Middle East. He basically ended up declaring war against his own country, even while wearing the uniform of the U.S. Army. Hasan killed 12 people in Fort Hood, TX—Killeen, TX—while standing up and yelling “allahu Akbar,” the cry often used by suicide bombers and other terrorists in the Middle East and elsewhere.

Clearly, this was not a case of workplace violence. That is what the government called it: workplace violence. This was a terrorist attack, pure and simple; no more, no less than what happened that killed 3,000 Americans on September 11, 2001. And we know what the U.S. Government did in 2001, quite appropriately, in my view. The Secretary of Defense exercised his discretion to award Purple Hearts and the appropriate and commensurate benefits that go along with being casualties of war. That was war being declared against the United States. And the U.S. Congress issued an authorization for the use of military force, recognizing it as an act of war.

But when I tried to offer this amendment to recognize the loss of life in the line of duty of 11 military members and a Department of Defense contractor being awarded the Medal for the Defense of Freedom, which is sort of the civilian equivalent to a Purple Heart, when we sought to make sure the 30 other people who were shot but who survived would also be recognized and given the appropriate benefits, what was the response of the majority leader of the Senate? Well, about the same as it was for those military pensioners—the people who are wearing the uniform today and are hoping to accrue a retirement they can live on when they leave the military service. The majority leader's response to both the victims at Fort Hood and to Active-Duty military with regard to their pensions that are now being cut back as a result of the vote yesterday, was exactly the same: Tough luck. Tough luck. I don't care.

As I said earlier, while people may not care about the Senate rules and the traditions of the Senate, while they may not recognize this power grab that resulted in an unprecedented trampling of minority rights in the Senate, when these sorts of partisan power grabs happen, people get hurt.

The ones most people feel today are the broken promises of ObamaCare, which passed on a party-line vote in the Congress.

Mistakes get made. People get hurt. But today the people who are getting hurt the worst are the people we ought to be most concerned about—those who lost their lives in the line of duty in the war on terror, those who have been injured and survived those wounds, and those who keep us safe by fighting our Nation's wars. These are the people being hurt today.

I will support the underlying Defense authorization bill, but I did vote against closing off debate yesterday because I felt the denial of the opportunity to offer amendments and the opportunity to vote on important corrections to the bill, which I described a moment ago, was a terrible mistake. But those cries for rationality and reason were simply ignored.

I will vote for the underlying Defense authorization bill because it does contain some good work, but I am absolutely outraged on behalf of the people I represent in my State, some of whom I have described, by the majority leader's refusal to allow consideration of any amendments to the bill and his blatant disregard for the rights of my constituents.

I close by reminding the majority leader what he himself said—words out of his own mouth—7 years ago shortly before his party took control of the Chamber. And it is amazing to me to see how people change around here when they get in the majority. Sometimes they forget they will not always be in the majority. I have been here in the majority, and I have been here in the minority. I can tell you that I enjoy being in the majority more. But we need to respect minority rights in the Senate because eventually, if you serve here long enough, you will find yourself in the minority, and what goes around comes around.

But here is what the majority leader said before his party took control of this Chamber:

As majority leader, I intend to run the Senate with respect for the rules and for the minority rights the rules protect. . . . The Senate was established to make sure that minorities are protected. Majorities can always protect themselves, but minorities cannot. That is what the Senate is all about.

Back in 2006 I found those words inspiring. Today they are a bad joke.

I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recess from 12:45 p.m. until 2:15 p.m. and that the time in recess count postcloture; further, that the time from 2:15 p.m. until 2:35 p.m. be controlled by the majority leader or his designee and the time from 2:35 p.m. until 3:15 p.m. be controlled by the Republican leader or his designee.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENDED BENEFITS PROGRAM

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, my voice is a little weaker than usual

thanks to a winter cold, but I nevertheless come to the floor today because there is an issue on which it is important not to remain silent; that is, just a few days from today more than 1 million people across America are going to lose their unemployment benefits. Those benefits are a bridge to the next job. Those benefits are the foundation for a family during a rough time while searching for that next job. Those benefits ensure the stability of the family and provide a solid foundation for the children during those weeks and months. But instead of maintaining this important bridge for more than 1 million American families, we are going to allow it to be dismantled on December 28 of this year, 3 days after Christmas.

This chart gives a little bit of a feeling for how unemployment is working. We have the total number of those searching for work in Oregon who cannot find a job. We can see how it grew dramatically in 2008 when the economy collapsed and how it has gradually improved. Yet unemployment remains quite high in Oregon—not as high as it was but still quite high—and it remains quite high across this Nation.

We have a structure in place where every State provides 26 weeks of unemployment, and then, depending on the unemployment level in different States, States take advantage of a Federal program for emergency unemployment, which works a little bit like this: If the State's unemployment rate is below 6 percent, the State is eligible for 14 additional weeks of unemployment for families, so the total goes from 26 weeks to 40 weeks. If the State's unemployment rate is between 6 percent and 7 percent, the State is eligible for 28 weeks, for a total of 54 weeks—still less than 1 year of unemployment insurance. If it is between 7 percent and 9 percent, as it is in Oregon, the total goes to 37 additional weeks, which means, with the 26 underlying weeks with the State, 63 weeks. If the unemployment rate is over 9 percent, then the amount is 10 weeks more, for a total of 73.

On December 28, just days from today, there will be about 17,000 Oregonians who will be completely cut off from their unemployment—not tapered, not a few at a time; all of those who have more than 26 weeks right now will instantly be cut off. So that is 17,000 families or, at an average of 3 individuals per family, 50,000 Oregonians who are going to get from the Republicans in this Chamber a big lump of coal in their stocking.

Their argument is that we shouldn't keep this program in place because those folks should just go out and get jobs. I would remind them that this program was set up under a Republican administration, and it was set up to balance the fact that in States where jobs are more readily available, the number of weeks of provided unemployment assistance is fewer, and in States with higher levels of unemployment, where it is virtually impossible to find a job because there are so many applicants for any one job, then the number of unemployment weeks is greater.

This was a bipartisan plan, and this plan was implemented when the national unemployment rate was 5.6 percent. The unemployment rate today is 7.3 percent. The bipartisan emergency unemployment program that provided more than 26 weeks was implemented when there were 137.3 million Americans working—more Americans who were working than today.

So what was good enough under a Republican administration, under bipartisan support—that created a careful balance between unemployment; that is, the challenge of getting a job, and the bridge to the next job—if it worked then, why not now? Why throw 17,000 families in Oregon out in the cold? I hear silence in this Chamber. I don't hear a reply. Why is it justified to terminate this program when unemployment is still high?

Some of my colleagues want to keep all the special tax breaks for the oil companies and all the special tax breaks for the coal companies. But what do they want to give to the families who are looking for work in high-unemployment areas, where it is virtually impossible to find a job? They want to give them a lump of coal. It is wrong.

Moreover, not only does this program help those families directly, but it helps the entire economy improve gradually because those benefits are immediately spent by these families. These benefits help families get through a hard time. They help them pay the mortgage, which solidifies not just this family but by preventing foreclosures solidifies the street and the community from the impacts of foreclosure, of empty homes. It has guarded the family between getting to the next job and ending up homeless.

I call upon my colleagues to come to this Chamber and pass immediately the extension of this carefully balanced program which not only directly benefits families who are doing the hard work of finding the next job but provides a solid foundation for our economy. This is no time to try to deflate our economy and throw more people out of work, but that is what happens when we cut this program.

I encourage my colleagues to think carefully about the fact that this program was neither a Democratic program nor a Republican program. Think carefully about the fact that it was developed during a Republican administration, that it was designed to carefully pull itself back in as employment improved. But what isn't right is for it to be cut off completely in this period of ongoing high unemployment.

While the average in Oregon is between 7 percent and 8 percent unemployment, we have communities with far greater than 10 percent or 12 percent unemployment. So many families are wanting that next job. There is nothing better than a job in terms of any type of social program. It creates a sense of self-worth, it creates a sense of structure, and it creates a sense of satisfaction. The families in Oregon want jobs and they are applying, but there are not enough jobs to go around.

That brings me to my next point. This Chamber should be considering program after program to invest in infrastructure and invest in manufacturing to create jobs. But there are those here who have sought to paralyze this Chamber in every possible way, to prevent any improvements, in terms of trying to sustain partisan campaign warfare rather than problem solving. This is an abdication of responsibility as a Senator. The responsibility is to be here working hard to solve the problems for families across this Nation, not continuing the partisan politics of the last campaign.

The American people see this partisan campaigning, and they do not like it. They want to see problem solving. They want to see us coming together to fix things.

A few moments ago the colleague from Texas was on this floor. He was saying some things that were extraordinarily misleading. He said, basically, that all of the paralyzing strategies that his party has employed stem from a lack of amendments. We have seen those paralyzing tactics in every possible responsibility that this body has. We have seen them on executive nominees. There are no amendments on executive nominees. You either approve them or you do not. We have seen this paralyzing strategy on judicial nominees, but there is no tree—the tree he referred to, the amendment tree—on judicial nominees. We have seen this on conference committees, unparalleled blockade of letting the House and Senate meet together to resolve differences in their bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. MERKLEY. Madam President, I know we are closing down this body, according to the unanimous consent agreement. I am thankful for the opportunity to address this important issue, about the fact that it is wrong to put lumps of coal into stockings of working Americans rather than extending the emergency unemployment insurance provisions.

I yield the floor.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in recess until 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:45 p.m., recessed until 2:15 p.m. when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Ms. HEITKAMP).

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 1845

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, last week I had the opportunity to see Charles Dickens' classic "A Christmas Carol." As my colleagues know, this is a morality tale that highlights the plight of the poor, the less fortunate, and the unemployed. In fact, when Charles Dickens began to work on "A Christmas Carol," he was so upset with the plight of youth and children working in the mines in England, he started out to write about that in a novel that evolved into a tale about Christmas, "A Christmas Carol."

As I watched "A Christmas Carol" with my wife in Ford's Theater about a week ago, I was struck by the following line from the spirit of Jacob Marley. Here is what he said:

Mankind was my business. The common welfare was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance, benevolence, was all my business. The dealings of my trade were but a drop of water in the comprehensive ocean of my business.

With that line, Dickens was advocating for those less fortunate and voicing his support for economic equality. Those words are most appropriate today at this time of year.

I come to the floor today with my friend, the Senator from Rhode Island JACK REED to share our concerns about the weak labor market, those who have been unemployed for so long, and its impact on the Nation's 11 million unemployed. Senator REED and I are especially concerned about those who have been without work for an extended period of time.

It has been 4 years since the end of the great recession, and while the Nation's economy has been slow to recover, steadily adding jobs, a large section of society is still out of work. Of the Nation's 11 million unemployed, a little over 4 million of our friends and neighbors are considered long-term unemployed. That means they have been without work for 6 months or more.

Most people who find themselves out of work are eligible to receive assistance from their State for 26 weeks, as they look for a new job. But, for far too many, finding a new job in a sluggish economy has been extremely difficult. When State aid is exhausted, Federal emergency unemployment insurance kicks in and helps families to help make ends meet. However, that safety net is now about to expire. It is about to expire in just a couple of weeks.

In fact, in less than 2 weeks, Federal emergency unemployment insurance will run out. On December 28, 1.3 million people will lose their unemployment benefits. These are people who are obviously hurting. If they don't have a job, they would love to find a job, and if they have a job, they are trying to make ends meet. They are understandably discouraged, unsuccessful at finding work.

We cannot cast them aside. We need to provide out-of-work Americans the security they need while they continue to look for jobs. We need to help them look for work—clearly—and put food on the table for their families.

Extending the jobless aid to the long-time out-of-work must be a priority for this Congress. With the House already in recess, we will not be able to extend emergency unemployment benefits before the end of the year. But it is my hope that when Congress returns, we can retroactively extend benefits.

At the same time, when we return next month, we need to explore long-term unemployment solutions. We need to jump-start policies that will grow our economy more rapidly and create new jobs. It has to be a dual track: Benefits for those unemployed but also assistance to find ways for more people to get jobs.

We all care deeply about this. I know no one who cares more deeply than my good friend from Rhode Island JACK REED. He has been working diligently, looking at every possible solution to try to find a way to make sure unemployment benefits are extended.

That is why we are working together. This issue is under the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, but JACK has worked very hard to ensure these Americans are not cast aside. Senator REED and I will do all we can to try to find a solution.

I tip my hat especially to the Senator from Rhode Island for all he has done. He is a tireless advocate for a solution for those unemployed. Together, we will try, as Dickens said, to make the common welfare our business.

Thank you, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Madam President, first let me thank Chairman BAUCUS for his very kind words, but also salute the President of the United States for his wisdom in announcing that he intends to appoint the Senator from Montana to be our next ambassador to the People's Republic of China. I can't think of anyone whose integrity, intelligence, commitment to the Nation, and patriotism would so well serve and be so beneficial to this country as continuing in his public efforts after his days in the Senate in the embassy in Beijing.

I also thank the chairman because he has been an articulate and effective advocate for unemployment compensation benefits for hard-working Americans who are without work through no fault of their own. This economy has suffered a drastic contraction, beginning in 2007, 2008, and 2009. We are seeing some improvements. During this period, the chairman has been the key actor, the key force driving for extended benefits.

Chairman BAUCUS has been the driving force as well in the context of trying to reform the program. He has implemented efforts such as work sharing, a proposal I brought to him, that is a smart way to do business. It basically allows a company to retain their workers for part of the week and let them collect benefits for the rest of the week, so they keep the workforce together. In Rhode Island, it has been extremely beneficial. It is now a nationwide program because of Chairman BAUCUS.

He is working very hard—as he indicated, we are working together—to ensure that we do not see this cliff where 1.3 million Americans lose their benefits on December 28.

Yesterday, I came to the floor to discuss some of the economics behind the logic of extending these benefits. I believe the extensive amount of economic research supports the very common-sense notion that I think the vast majority of our colleagues share: That Americans want to work. They are in an environment, however, where jobs are scarce. There are two workers for every job, and in some parts of the country that ratio is even much worse.

However, I hear other colleagues say: That might be true, but we have to fix this program because we have abuse and we have fraud. The chairman, in his efforts, has always demonstrated that we are committed to rooting out any type of fraud or abuse. In 2012, for example, we strengthened the requirement that one has to search for work to qualify for unemployment compensation. We also improved program integrity by having beneficiaries show up more frequently for in-person assessments to help them find a job quicker and ensure they receive the right benefit amount based on their past work history.

So we want the program to be efficient. We do not want the program to be subject to abuse. That means that more people can benefit correctly and not abuse the system. So I am sure the chairman and I are quite willing—I know I am, and I know he is too—to work hard if we need reforms. But we can't do that in 10 days. We can't do that. We need some time.

So I have joined together with Senator HELLER to suggest a 3-month extension. That will allow us—and this is a bipartisan effort, and I thank the Senator from Nevada—to keep people from falling off the edge, literally.

The average benefit in Rhode Island is about $350 a week. There are very few people who are going to give up a job to collect about $350 a week. By the way, that money is going right from the check to the local grocery store, to pay for heat or to pay for rent. That is why CBO has estimated that if we don't extend unemployment benefits, we will see a situation in which we lose approximately 200,000 jobs next year which we could have otherwise had, and that we will see our economic GDP growth shrink by about 0.2 percent, because the demand generated by unemployment checks going out in the mail will be lost. It is one of those programs that provides about $1.70, $1.60, for every dollar we invest. So this is about good economics, not just, as Senator BAUCUS said so eloquently, about our commitment to something beyond ourselves, to the welfare and the good faith of our neighbors in the spirit of Christmas, the true spirit of this holiday.

The other thing, too, is if we look at this argument: Well, we are not going to extend the program because of abuse—we can look at a lot of programs; we can look at the crop insurance program, for example. I don't hear many people saying: Oh, let's cut out that crop insurance program because of abuse. Just recently, this year, the Department of Justice prosecuted a very large, significant case of widespread tobacco crop fraud spanning 6 years. A Federal district judge brought to justice an insurance agent and a farmer. Prison time was ordered, more than $8 million of restitution had to be paid, but no one is standing up and saying: Let's cut crop insurance because of this case.

Let's get realistic. We need to extend these benefits, and we need to do it promptly because the 28th is just upon us.

Shortly, I will make a unanimous consent request, but before that, I wish to recognize my colleague, Senator STABENOW. Then, I ask that at 2:30, if she could yield the floor back to me so that I may make my request.

With that, I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Ms. STABENOW. Madam President, Federal emergency unemployment benefits are going to expire on December 28 unless we do something to stop it.

Right now, there are 11 million Americans out of work through no fault of their own.

They are trying to find work, and they rely on unemployment insurance to help them keep food on the table and keep a roof over their heads and their families' heads, while they search for a new job.

And now, over 1 million people who are trying to find work stand to lose their unemployment insurance on December 28 because Congress has not acted.

Let me repeat that: Just 3 days after Christmas, 1 million people will lose a critical source of income while they look for work because of us.

Letting Federal unemployment insurance expire would be devastating for families all across the country.

I have heard from many of my constituents in Michigan on just how bad this will be, and how it will affect their families.

There are stories throughout Michigan and across our country.

It is astounding that Congress would even consider letting this expire, given that unemployment rates in many States are higher today than they were in 2008 when we passed this law.

In June of 2008, when the President signed this law, the national unemployment rate was under 6 percent. Today, it is 7 percent.

Even though we are seeing a number of great things happening in Michigan, we are still struggling to create enough jobs for everyone who needs one.

And because of that, Michigan just moved back into a position where, as a State with a high percentage of people out of work, Federal emergency unemployment benefits have been extended to 36 weeks.

This means that people in Michigan who are trying to find a job get a few more weeks to find something before they lose this critical lifeline.

But not if we let it expire.

The story is the same in many States across the country.

Today, 46 out of the 50 states, including Michigan, have higher unemployment rates than they did when this law went into effect.

While we are seeing some positive signs in the economic numbers, there are still almost 11 million Americans out of work.

That is far too many. There are three people who are looking for work for every 1 job available.

And if we don't act, if we don't extend this critical lifeline, then over 43,000 people in Michigan—and over 1 million longterm unemployed people across the country—will face an uncertain future.

We are six days from Christmas; six days from our children waking up and running to the Christmas tree to see what Santa brought them.

And the question facing thousands of families in Michigan—facing Regina in Holland and Stephen in Dearborn—and over a million men and women across the country, is: Will there be anything under the tree on Christmas morning?

Will there be a house to sleep in on Christmas Eve?

Will there be food on the table tonight, or tomorrow night, or on Christmas night?

These are people who are out of work through no fault of their own.

People who have lost their jobs are already on the ropes.

They have already seen cuts to unemployment insurance that have made it harder to make ends meet.

And now Congress is threatening to pull the rug out from under them.

These are people who want to work, who are trying to work, and just need help getting by while they find a new job. Giving them the benefits they earned isn't a "disservice"—it is a lifeline.

This is what little money families have to get by—and they spend it at the grocery store and to pay their bills.

Without this help, they could lose their homes to foreclosure.

At such a critical time in our economic recovery, we cannot afford another wave of foreclosures.

It is also important to note that this is unemployment insurance—people earned it by working, and in order to qualify for this assistance, you must be actively looking for a job every week.

Letting the Federal emergency unemployment benefits expire would hurt these families and would send a ripple effect through the economy.

Congress should be helping to create jobs, not pulling the rug out from under people looking for jobs.

There is no reason for this to happen. We can pass a bill to extend this critical help.

In the past, both parties have always worked together to continue emergency unemployment insurance when the economy is struggling.

This is not the time to pull the rug out from people looking for work.

I urge my colleagues to come together in a bipartisan way to extend unemployment insurance so our families—and the economy—do not suffer.

Again, I thank Senator REED who has been such a champion on this issue. I have been proud to partner with him on behalf of over a million people who are trying to find work and will lose their unemployment benefits three days after Christmas, on December 28. I can't think of anything more devastating to families trying to put food on the table and a roof over their heads.

I also thank Senator BAUCUS for his leadership on this issue and congratulate him on his new opportunity for the future.

Specifically, let me read letters that I think tell it all from people in Michigan.

Regina from Holland writes:

I am begging you to extend unemployment insurance. I have been unemployed since June. I am almost done with my first tier of unemployment. I have been trying to find work. I am 59 years old, and that does not help in finding a job.

Madam President, let me say we have way too many women—we have way too many people who are in their 50s and in their 60s trying to find work and having a very difficult time for a number of reasons.

She goes on to say:

If you don't pass extensions, my family will only have my husband's Social Security check coming in, and we'll lose our home. I am really scared we will not have this money coming in after December 28th, and I don't know what we will do.

I also heard from Stephen in Dearborn who wrote me and said:

This December 28 deadline directly affects me and my family. I have been unemployed for 6 months. I have been struggling to keep things afloat for my wife and my two young children.

If these benefits cease at the end of the month, it will put us even closer to losing everything my wife and I have worked very hard for.

The reality is, even though the economy is getting better, we still have three people looking for every one job that is available. At one time it was five people, so we have made some progress. But the truth is we still have a situation where way too many people in Michigan and across the country—in fact, almost 11 million people are out of work, and we have three people fighting for every one job that is available.

We also still have challenges as it relates to matching up the jobs with the skills that people have. Not that people don't have skills, but they are different than the jobs that are available. People going back to school, they want to work. We all want the dignity of financial independence and work. But too many people are struggling in an economy they did not create, a global economy they did not create.

If we do not act—if we do not support Senator REED's motion—over 43,000 people in Michigan, over 1 million long-term unemployed people across the country will find themselves in a devastating situation right after Christmas. It makes no sense. I urge my colleagues to join together and do what we have done with Republican Presidents, Democratic Presidents, what we have done on a bipartisan basis over the years; and that is to make sure we have a lifeline for people who are needing temporary help while they look for work.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 265, S. 1845, the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Extension Act; the bill be read a third time and passed, and the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican whip.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, it is unfortunate that the Senate schedule is chock-full of pending cloture motions that are controversial or completely nonurgent nominations. So I would ask the Senator to amend his consent request to say that the pending cloture motions on executive nominations be withdrawn and that following the disposition of the Defense bill, the Senate proceed to consideration of S. 1845, the unemployment insurance extension, and that the majority leader and the minority leader be recognized to offer amendments in an alternating fashion so these important issues can be considered this week. I ask for that amended consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator so modify his request?

Mr. REED. I do not modify my request. I would insist on my request since it is the only practical means of getting the measure passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CORNYN. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REED. Madam President, I believe I have a few minutes left—2 minutes. So before Senator MCCAIN takes the floor, let me make a few more points that I think are critical.

Last month, the economy did add jobs—203,000 jobs. But what we are seeing is the average length of unemployment is increasing. People are still out of work now an average of 36 weeks. That is more than 20 weeks longer than prerecession levels, and it is longer than the 26 weeks of State unemployment insurance.

That is why we are here asking for benefits. People now are averaging a much longer time without finding work. This is not a situation where they fall within the State program. They have to have these Federal benefits, because it is harder and harder to find work.

I would also suggest, too, that if you look at it another way, in 2008, when President Bush started this emergency unemployment compensation program, it took the average jobless American 5.6 months to find employment. Now, with the increased long-term unemployment, it takes about 9 months.

So again, this is a reason why these long-term extended benefits are absolutely necessary. I would hope our colleagues would join myself and Senator HELLER and Chairman BAUCUS and Senator STABENOW and others and continue to move aggressively forward and see if we can, in fact, extend the benefits so that many Americans can continue to have some assistance and some sustenance as they continue to look for work.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I just watched again what is going on here on the floor of the Senate. Again there is a unanimous consent request to pass a major piece of legislation without an amendment, without debate, without the ability of those on this side of the aisle to even have an amendment considered and voted on, again completely shutting out this side of the aisle from the ability in any way to effect legislation.

So now I am sure those on the other side of the aisle are going to go out and say: Oh, the Republicans, look at them, they will not even agree to an extension of unemployment insurance.

Won't you let us have an amendment? Won't you let us at least have debate and vote on an amendment? There are some of us who think this program can be improved to help those who are unemployed. But, no, the way the Senate runs today it is either take it or leave it.

I will tell the Chair and I will tell my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, we are getting sick and tired of it. We are getting sick and tired of the dictatorial way the U.S. Senate is being run.

The Senator from South Carolina and I are on the floor to talk about, among other things, the National Defense Authorization Act, the bill that has to do with this Nation's defense. Are we going to be able to have a single amendment? No. The bill has been out of the Senate Armed Services Committee since May.

So we are not going to address the issue of sexual assaults, protecting individual rights in light of revelations in NSA data collection. I would say to my colleagues, the President had a commission that just made some recommendations. Would it not be appropriate to take those commission recommendations, debate them here on the floor of the Senate, and amend the bill so that some of these recommendations by this commission could be enacted into law?

Do we believe that the issue of surveillance, of NSA data collection, is not an issue that should be debated on the floor of the U.S. Senate? We would be doing that—we would be debating, we would be amending, we would be making it better, we would be protecting the privacy of Americans' lives—if on this floor we were amending and debating the Defense authorization bill. But we are not. We are not.

Are we going to talk about this incredible issue which has permeated so much debate, both in and outside of the Congress of the United States, of sexual assaults in the military? No. Nope. We are not going to allow an amendment on the other side of the aisle by the Senator from New York, who has made it her major legislative effort. We are not going to hear from this side of the aisle, where the Senator from Missouri has made it her major issue. No, we are not going to debate it. We are not going to amend it.

What about the issue of detainees? The Senator from South Carolina and I are not in complete agreement. I had looked forward to a debate with him about how we dispose of the situation of detainees, each one of whom is costing a million and a half dollars per year for their incarceration.

But, no, we are not going to do any of that today or tomorrow or next week or next month or maybe even next year if the majority leader of the Senate continues to run the Senate in such a way that we cannot even have debate and discussion.

I will tell my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, this is bad for the U.S. Senate, but it is worse for the American people. We have an obligation to the American people to debate issues, to vote on them, to pass legislation that we think is the best outcome. There would be votes I would lose, there would be votes I would win, but we are not going to have any votes.

The galling thing about it is that the Defense bill passed through the Senate Armed Services Committee in May. So we went to June, July, August, September, October, November, and here we are finally maybe going out for the year and we are going to have an up-or-down vote—an up-or-down vote—on the Defense authorization bill. That is shameful. That is a perversion of everything that the U.S. Senate was designed for by our Founding Fathers, and there is no doubt about it.

I came to the floor with my friend from South Carolina to talk about Iran sanctions. But have no doubt—have no doubt—I tell my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, you are doing a great disservice to the American people, to the men and women who are serving this Nation, by not even fully debating and amending and voting on those amendments on this bill. You are doing a disservice to the men and women who are serving this Nation.

So you should not be proud of this process we are going through. Some time today or tomorrow, depending on how many hours go by, we will have a vote, and I will vote to pass the bill. I will vote that way because I cannot do this to the American people, to the men and women who are serving. There are too many provisions in it that address bonuses, special duty, incentive pay, military construction, security—all kinds of issues that are obtained in this bill. So we cannot turn it down, but we cannot make it a bill that the American people should be proud of. In fact, we should be embarrassed at the process we are engaged in.

Frankly, I know the American people are not too interested or aware of the arcane promises of the U.S. Senate, but steps were taken early and not that long ago that have changed the entire U.S. Senate, and it has changed it for the worse.

I can assure my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that it will be very difficult—very, very difficult—for us to work with our colleagues on the other side of the aisle on most any issue when we are being deprived of the fundamental rights of a U.S. Senator, and that is the right to propose an amendment, debate, and have a vote, if that U.S. Senator wishes it.

No longer are 45 Members on this side of the aisle allowed what should be our right—not a privilege, our right—to amend this legislation in order to make it better and make it a better and more effective way to defend this Nation.

I have been around this body for a long time. This may be one of the lowest points I have seen, particularly in light of the fact that the Defense authorization bill for 51 years has been brought to the floor of the Senate, it has been debated, it has been amended, sometimes for as long as 3 weeks, and now what are we going to do? Sometime tonight or tomorrow, at some hour, we are going to have the privilege of voting yea or nay on a bill that is vital to our Nation's security. Disgraceful.

I see my colleague from South Carolina on the floor, and I ask unanimous consent to engage in a colloquy with the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IRAN SANCTIONS

Mr. MCCAIN. Madam President, I am sure my colleague and friend saw the article in the Wall Street Journal this morning that says "France Doubts Iran Ready for Nuclear Pact. Foreign Minister Laurent Fabius Questions Whether Tehran Is Willing to Abandon the Ability to Build an Atomic Bomb."

Really, in the first paragraph of this story—I would ask my colleague—is the fundamental problem. There are many issues concerning the Iranians lie, cheat for years and years about their continued progress toward the acquisition of a nuclear weapon. But I would ask my friend from South Carolina, isn't it really about the most important—let me put it this way: The most important aspect of this whole issue of these negotiations is the right to enrich? In other words, will the Iranians—haven't we already given over to them the right to continue to have the centrifugal spin and the enrichment process continue so that at some point, sooner or later, they may be only the turn of a wrench away from a nuclear weapon?

Mr. GRAHAM. Senator MCCAIN is absolutely right. The interim deal does not dismantle the centrifuges. They are spinning as we talk. They disconnect, not dismantle, some advanced centrifuges that have been installed.

What people need to realize is that the Iranians, over the last decade—particularly the last 3 years—have developed a very mature enrichment program: 18,000 centrifuges. They do not need 20-percent enriched uranium anymore for these new centrifuges to get to 90 percent, which would produce a uranium-based bomb; they can do it with a 3½-percent stockpile.

So I guess this is the basic question for us as a nation and the world at large: Do you believe the Iranians when they say that they are not trying to develop a nuclear weapon, that they are only trying to develop peaceful nuclear power? Do you believe them when they make that claim given the reality of their enrichment program, their lying, and their cheating? If their goal is to enrich not for peaceful nuclear power purposes but to make a bomb, how do you get them to change their goal?

I think what Senator MCCAIN is pointing out is very important. The interim deal, like it or not, has legitimized enrichment in Iran. How do you go from not dismantling the plutonium reactor—complete dismantling, shutting down and dismantling the centrifuges—and turning the stockpile over to the international community after the interim deal—how do you go from there to the end game? We are so far away from an acceptable outcome.

I hope people understand what the French are saying. The French are telling us they do not believe that the Iranian negotiators and the Iranian regime are serious about abandoning an enrichment program that could break out and produce a nuclear weapon.

I appreciate Senator MCCAIN's leadership on these issues. Syria, Iran—you name it, he has been there.

I would like to ask this question to Senator MCCAIN: Does the Senator believe the Iranians when they say they are not trying to acquire a nuclear weapon? From the U.S.-Israel point of view, what would happen to our nations if they had that capability?

Mr. MCCAIN. May I say to my friend that one of the things that would happen right away—I think it is well known; it is not a secret—is that many nations in the region would then quickly acquire nuclear weapons. The wealthiest ones might just buy one from Pakistan. That is not a secret.

But could I ask my colleague this: So therefore we now have a period of 6 months which originally was stated as the end goal, that an agreement would be made and finalized and would be ready to be put into effect. But then we hear: Well, maybe it is going take more than 6 months.

One, haven't we seen that movie before—extended and protected negotiations, and then the centrifuges, as the Senator from South Carolina mentioned, continue to spin.

Also, wouldn't it be appropriate for the Congress to say to the administration—and, more importantly, to the Iranians—that after 6 months, my friends, the screws are going to tighten because if they cannot get an agreement in 6 months, then it would be appropriate for there to be additional pressures that would then hopefully be incentives for them to reach a final agreement rather than the status quo, which most of us believe is not satisfactory under this 6-month period.

Should there not be some sanctions that would kick in after a 6-month period, and then the Iranians would know that if they do not reach an agreement, then the sanctions will be more severe?

Perhaps my colleague can explain to me why the Secretary of State and the administration seem to be so opposed to us putting more pressure on the whole process to be finalized. Six months seems to be a reasonable length of time to get that done.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, the Senator is right. This interim agreement has not been implemented yet. They have 6 months to reach a final agreement but also an additional 6 months beyond that—a year, basically—to drag out these negotiations.

The Senator asked the ultimate question. Does the Senator not believe sanctions are the only reason the Iranians are at the table?

I compliment the administration for putting together an international regime to take the sanctions that Congress has passed—over their objections, I might add—to really inflict pain on the Iranian regime—unfortunately, the people too. But that is the only reason they are at the table.

But here is the analysis, as I understand it. People in the administration believe there is a moderate element and a hard-line element. Iran is telling the United States and the P5+1: If you threaten us with any more sanctions, we will walk away. We are not going to negotiate with a gun to our heads.

Now, these are the people who have been using a lot of guns and have put a lot of guns to people's heads and actually pulled the trigger, killed hundreds of soldiers in Iraq, and have created chaos and mayhem in Syria. They are one of the biggest supporters of state terrorism. But that is an odd thing for them to say, when I believe the only reason they are at the table to begin with is because of sanctions.

So my belief is that new sanctions tied to the end game—and this is what we have been working on in a bipartisan fashion. It is not just keeping the sanctions alive for the next year; it is tying their relief to an outcome that we all want.

I want a peaceful resolution of the Iranian nuclear program. If they want a peaceful nuclear power program, they can have it; just control the fuel cycle. That has been my position.

If they want an enrichment capability that has to be monitored by the U.N. and it is robust and the only reason they will not break out to get a nuclear weapon is because of U.N. inspectors, that is North Korea.

The movie the Senator talked about is the movie called North Korea, where you would impose sanctions, you would relieve them, you would give them money, you would give them food, you would reinstate sanctions, and you would have U.N. inspectors to control the progress. The program was never dismantled.

Don't repeat the mistakes in Iran that were repeated in North Korea. Dismantle this program before it is too late.

To the administration, we are trying to help, not hurt. I do not believe there is a moderate element when it comes to the Iranian nuclear power program. I think that is a facade. The new President is a charming fellow on television, but he was a nuclear negotiator in 2004 and 2005 for the Iranian regime and openly bragged about how much advancement they made during his time negotiating toward an enrichment program that could produce a bomb.

So this idea that there are hard-liners and moderates when it comes to the Iranian nuclear program is a miscalculation. So we are working on bipartisan sanctions, to continue them, and they can only be relieved when we dismantle the enrichment program, when we dismantle the plutonium reactor, the heavy water reactor that has nothing to do with producing nuclear power for peaceful purposes, and remove the stockpile as the U.N. has recommended. The U.N. resolutions are in force today, are on the books today. This agreement is to the left of the U.N.

So the reason we are pushing sanctions in a bipartisan fashion is we want to avoid a conflict. The Iranian nuclear program has to be stopped one way or the other—through diplomacy and sanctions or through force, unless—that is the option. I cannot imagine a world with Ayatollahs with nukes. It would create a nuclear arms race. The Senator just got back from Saudi Arabia. Sunni Arab nations would want their own nuclear weapon, and we would be on the road to Armageddon. Israel—my God, how could they sit on the sideline and watch a nuclear weapon be produced by people who threaten every day to wipe them off the map?

We are hoping we can produce sanctions that would enable and enhance the administration's opportunity to get a peaceful resolution. Sanctions and diplomacy end the program in a peaceful way. This is our last chance. If we get this wrong, history will judge us poorly. They are trying to get a nuclear weapon. They are hellbent. The only thing that will stop them is pressure.

I want to ask the Senator a question. Why are Japanese banks and other business entities rushing to do business with Iran when the interim deal—relief and sanctions—do you believe that the international community is of the mindset that the sanctions are breaking down, that they are trying to jump ahead of each other to do business with Iran, and that if Congress passed a new round of sanctions, it would stop that breakout? Do you think that makes sense?

Mr. MCCAIN. Well, I think it might. I think this whole perception of the United States around the world, of our weakness, whether it be manifested in the Middle East with recent—I am sure my friend from South Carolina saw the comments of the former high-ranking member of the Saudi Government. The Japanese are now starting to go their own way because they believe the American pivot is not reality. There are manifestations of this perception of American weakness all over the world. So I am not sure they believe we are serious here or most anyplace else.

The Senator from South Carolina raises an excellent point. I seem to remember that during the days of the Cold War we used to look at the reviewing stand on the May Day Parade, and we would point out one guy and say: Well, he is a moderate. He is a soft-liner. Well, he is a hard-liner. You know, we hope that—fill in the blank—is going to really have a beneficial effect and that the Russians are going to change and blah, blah, blah. There was always this belief about hard-liners and soft-liners. We know now from history that was never the case.

So now we look at Iran. Oh, there are the hard-liners and the soft-liners. Doesn't that ignore the fundamental fact that there is one man who governs Iran and makes all the decisions? That guy is the Ayatollah. Now that Ahmadinejad, the hard-liner—and Rouhani, by the way, as the Senator from South Carolina mentioned, bragged and bragged about how he deceived the Americans and the other countries when he was the negotiator for Iran. Now he is the moderate. Now he is the good guy. So all this is fraud.

But I guess the other point that I think really needs to be made that we forget is this: In Syria and in Iran—this administration, this President, and this Secretary of State look at these countries as an arms control issue. They look at Syria as an arms control issue while from helicopters they are dropping bombs that are killing and massacring women and children, while they are committing the most atrocious acts—on the one hand, the Secretary of State and his friend Sergei Lavrov are removing chemical weapons from Syria while planeloads of weapons from Russia fly into Damascus, and they kill people. I am not sure whether a mother in Syria can discriminate whether that child was killed by a chemical weapon or by a conventional weapon.

So here we have the Iranians committing acts of terror all over the world, sending the Iranian Revolutionary Guard into Syria, training Bashar Assad's troops in Iran and sending them back, sending in supply after supply of weapons to kill Syrians, plots to kill even the Saudi Arabia Ambassador here in Washington, DC. Yemen has tried to smuggle in a whole boatload of weapons from Iran. The list goes on and on of their Persian ambitions throughout the Arab world and the world, but, by golly, we trust them to sit down and negotiate with us seriously on the issue of nuclear weapons.

This is the most narrow view of Iran that has ever happened in history.

So I do not see how we can judge Iranian seriousness about really wanting to rein in and eliminate their progress toward nuclear weapons without considering their behavior throughout the world, particularly in the Middle East, which is one of aggression, terror, and outright murder of people and destabilizing the entire region to the Iranian advantage.

Mr. GRAHAM. Well, I think the point Senator MCCAIN is making is dead-on. Is it not true that our government has designated the Iranian regime—their government—as one of the largest state sponsors of terrorism in the world? Is that correct?

Mr. MCCAIN. True.

Mr. GRAHAM. Now, here is the question. It is a good question. If they had a nuclear weapon, would they be likely to end such activity or would they be more effective in expanding it?

Mr. MCCAIN. May I interrupt? I forgot one aspect of Iranian behavior that is the most egregious: their sponsorship of Hezbollah. There are 5,000 Hezbollah from Lebanon, sponsored by Iran, who are killing Syrians as we speak at the bidding of the Ayatollah and maybe Rouhani, who is supposed to be a moderate.

Mr. GRAHAM. I think what the Senator has just described—the litany of chaos and mayhem spread by the Iranian regime that he knows probably better than anyone because he spent so much time there—it is Hezbollah but also Hamas. They are all in. The people who create the biggest upheaval for Israel are all in for their buddy Assad, the butcher of Damascus. Without Iran's support, one of the most evil people on the planet would not have a chance.

Doesn't the Senator believe we are in a proxy war between us and the Iranians in Syria? That if we don't—and our actions towards whether we are going to use force or we are not going to use force, with Assad winning—that our policies toward Syria are affecting the regime's belief about what we may do about their nuclear program?

One thing that might reset our resolve as a nation is for the Congress to impose additional sanctions so the Ayatollahs will not be confused about our lack of will in Syria when it comes to their nuclear program. The bottom line is, after our debacle in Syria, doesn't the Senator think we have a problem with the Iranian regime of taking us seriously?

The international community is now breaking the sanctions. If new sanctions were imposed in a bipartisan way, that is the best way to reset the debate.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would also point out, one, if we are looking for one bright spot, that we see countries in the gulf and the Middle East aligning with Israel in a way that we have never seen before. Shouldn't we listen to the Prime Minister of Israel, which is the first target of Iran? It is the country about which the Iranians said, and have not renounced, that it is their commitment to "wiping Israel off the map." Does the Senator think that maybe relations between ourselves and Israel are at the lowest ebb?

Does the Senator think it is an accident when now the Saudis and leaders of other countries are outspoken in their derision of the United States for a lack of leadership in the Middle East?

Finally, isn't it interesting that the Russians, for the first time since 1973, when Anwar Sadat threw them out of Egypt, are now major players in the Middle East?

Mr. GRAHAM. I think the whole Middle East is going in the wrong direction at warp speed. Congress has some obligation to speak up, to do something about it, and to try to help the administration when we can.

No. 1, a new round of sanctions, if we could muster bipartisan support, would send a great message to the Iranians: We don't see you the same as we do Syria.

There was a lot of confusion and differences in the body about what to do in Syria.

The Senator has been right for 3 years on this whole topic, but we are where we are. So a new round of sanctions, bipartisanly passed, would tell the Iranians that the American Congress and people look at them differently than the problem in Syria.

It would also be a statement in the international community: We are resolved to get this program dismantled by using sanctions. We are not backing off, so stop this breakout.

Finally to our friends, to the Israelis, to the Sunni Arab States, wouldn't it be welcome news to be tougher on Iran and to have the Congress reinforce the message to the Iranians that we are going to keep in place sanctions until they dismantle their program? Wouldn't that be some welcome news in a region that is absolutely desperate for some good news from America?

Mr. MCCAIN. I think so.

I thank my colleagues for their forbearance. I agree with the Senator from South Carolina.

I think it is imperative for the Congress and our role in the U.S. Government that these sanctions be enacted. The administration has plenty of time to negotiate, but we want to be prepared for failure. There is no reason not to make those preparations.

I began our conversation with the comments of the foreign minister of France. That concern is shared by many of our friends and allies both in and out of the region.

I note the presence of the Senator from Mississippi on the floor. I am sure he has some very important words that will be translated into English.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. WARREN). The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WICKER. It would be inconceivable for the senior Senator from Arizona to say anything which I would find offensive or insulting, and I take no offense from his remarks.

I wish to be recognized. We are in morning debate; are we in debate on the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are postcloture and the Senator is recognized.

Mr. WICKER. I understand that soon Senator LEVIN will come to the floor, and perhaps there will be an exchange between Senator CORNYN and Senator LEVIN about a matter that may be coming to a vote sometime in the next half hour, and that would be the motion to table the filling of the tree.

I wish to speak for a moment or two about that. I think sometimes we talk about these things in shorthand within the Senate, and perhaps our constituents don't know what we are referring to when we say the majority leader has come in and filled the tree.

I know most Members understand this, but what that means is the majority leader comes in and he offers all of the amendments that could possibly be ordered at one particular time and, therefore, doesn't give anyone else the opportunity to offer amendments. That has really been a problem for us on the minority side.

We have that situation now, and perhaps the motion that will soon be made by Senator CORNYN will take care of that.

But on this important Defense bill, which has been brought to the floor in a shorthand manner, the majority leader has filled the tree, and there are five amendments offered.

One of the amendments, amendment No. 2555 by Senator REID of Nevada, simply does this: Strike the words "3 days" and put "4 days."

That is all the amendment does.

Another amendment: Strike the words "4 days" and insert "5 days."

That is all the amendment does.

There is another amendment that says: The act shall be effective 3 days after enactment.

There is another amendment that helps fill the tree: Change the word "request" to "requested."

In other words, not substantive amendments, but amendments designed to simply fill up the parliamentary tree and prohibit Members on our side or other Members from offering a substantive motion that might affect the defense policy of the United States of America.

I would simply point this out and reiterate what Senator CORNYN said earlier today. Since becoming majority leader, our current majority leader, Senator REID of Nevada, has filled the tree 79 times—in other words, offered all the amendments, prohibiting us from even getting a vote, getting a debate, on an idea that we might have.

By contrast, his 6 predecessors combined filled the tree only 49 times; in other words 79 times by this majority leader and 40 times by the other Democratic and Republican majority leaders.

Senate majority leader Bill Frist filled the tree 15 times during his 4 years. Democratic leader Tom Daschle filled the tree only once during his 1½ years.

Trent Lott was majority leader, and he did it 11 times in 5 years. George Mitchell from Maine, a very distinguished majority leader, filled the tree 3 times in 6 years; and Bob Dole, when he was majority leader, filled the tree 7 times in 3½ years.

The point I am making—and then I will sit down—is that this majority leader, in an unprecedented manner, has filled the tree over and over. Why? To prevent other Senators from having an opportunity, as representatives of the 50 States, to offer ideas to improve bills and to get them on record on important issues.

I would hope that we could have a parliamentary motion in just a few moments to allow this tree to be taken down and to allow the elected representatives of the 50 States to come before the President of the Senate and before the American people and offer different ideas.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. In a moment I will offer an amendment, and I know the distinguished chairman of the Armed Services Committee is here, but I wish to lay 5 minutes of groundwork.

The majority leader was down here earlier today talking about all the "necessary votes" that we have to have before everyone leaves town before the holidays. Of course, he was talking about a series of votes on nominees that he himself has set up since he is, in essence, the traffic cop for the Senate, and he gets to set the agenda unilaterally.

We know that while the majority leader has set up this series of votes on nominations—none of which are urgent and couldn't be done in January, and all of which are controversial—the majority leader is refusing to allow any vote on restoring pension benefits to the men and women of the U.S. Armed Services.

As we have talked about repeatedly over the last couple of days, the recent budget deal cuts their pension benefits by some $6 billion over 10 years, and we have learned that this agreement slashes the pension benefits of some of our wounded warriors, people who are medically retired.

Senator MURRAY from Washington, the distinguished chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, has called this a technical error—a technical error. She said it needs to be fixed, but we will do this next year.

Merry Christmas to our wounded warriors whose pensions, by virtue of the legislation that passed yesterday, have now been cut.

What makes matters worse is they have been discriminated against. No other Federal employee's pension benefits were cut, only those uniformed military members' pensions.

She calls it a technical error. I called it a mistake that needs to be fixed—not next month, not next year, but right now, today.

Why is it that the majority leader won't let us fix this right now. Why is it that he is blocking a vote on the relevant amendment? Why does he want to keep our veterans and our active duty military, including our wounded warriors, in limbo during the Christmas holidays?

Does he have a good reason for it? Is it really more important to confirm some mid-level appointees than to make sure that our wounded combat veterans get the pensions that they have earned?

Is it really more important for the Democrats to jam us with non-essential, nonurgent nominees than to take care of the people who sacrificed so much for their country?

One last question. Is it really more important to approve all of these nominees than to honor the men and women who lost their lives in a homegrown terrorist attack at Fort Hood, Texas, some 4 years ago at the hands of MAJ Nidal Hasan, a radicalized major in the U.S. Army who shouted the words "Allahu Akbar" before he proceeded to mow down 13 people, costing them their lives, and to injure 30 more soldiers and uniformed military who were injured that day.

The majority seems to think of this group of nonurgent, and controversial mid-level nominees that we have to get this done. That is why he is jamming this through and not allowing us to amend this legislation with a fix to the military pension or to allow us to honor the victims at Fort Hood with the recognition and the benefits that they so richly deserve.

Unfortunately, like so much around here lately, it is politics all the time, even if that means sleighting our wounded warriors and refusing to honor 13 brave Americans who were killed by a terrorist attack at a U.S. Army base.

I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending motion so that I may offer a motion to concur with amendment No. 2602, which is filed at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVIN. Objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I wonder if the good Senator from Texas would consent to my being allowed to speak for 5 minutes prior to the motion to table, which I understand is going to be forthcoming?

Mr. CORNYN. Responding to the distinguished Senator through the Chair, I would be happy for him to take whatever time he wishes to make comments now. Since he has made the objection, this would be a good time to do so, if he wishes.

Mr. LEVIN. I very much appreciate the courtesy of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Let me try in 5 minutes to encapsulate what is in the bill and why we are where we are.

The bill includes numerous provisions, as the Presiding Officer knows, to sustain the compensation and quality of life of our service men and women and their families—the quality of life they deserve as they face the hardships that are imposed by continuing military operations around the world.

In just a few of these provisions are 30 types of bonuses and special pay, $25 million for supplemental impact aid to local education agencies with military dependent children, money to assist the Department of Defense in assisting veterans in their transition to civilian life, provisions for the Special Operations Command at $9 billion, $1 billion for counter-IED efforts, a provision to require the Department of Defense to streamline the Department of Defense management headquarters at all levels by changing or reducing the size of staffs and eliminating tiers of management, cutting functions that provide little or no added value, and a new land withdrawal provision that the Marine Corps has been working so hard on at 29 Palms, CA. This is the No. 1 legislative priority of the Marine Corps. The Commandant explained to us that the Marine Corps has spent 6 years analyzing and preparing for this expansion so the Corps can meet its minimum training criteria.

As General Dempsey, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told us a few weeks ago, the authorities in this Defense bill "are critical to the Nation's defense and are urgently needed to ensure we keep faith with the men and women, military and civilians, selflessly serving in our armed forces."

Relative to the question of amendments which has been raised, we tried when this bill came to the floor to get consent to have amendments relate to the Defense authorization bill and we were unable to get that consent. We tried to get consent to adopt almost 40 cleared amendments as a managers' package. We could not get consent to do that. We asked to lock in 13 additional amendments for votes on both sides of the aisle, but equally divided, without prejudice as to further amendments that could be brought up but, again, there was objection.

Now, at this point, here is where we are. With the House of Representatives having left for the year, the only way we are going to get a defense bill enacted is by passing the bill before us as it stands. If it is amended, the bill would have to go back to the House of Representatives and the result would be we would get nothing enacted, killing both amendments as well as the bill itself. It would put the Defense authorization bill in limbo.

We have never done that. We have faced situations similar to this 2 years of the prior 5. We have always managed to pass a National Defense Authorization Act for 51 straight years. We followed the process in 2 of those last 5 years, which is not dissimilar to this process which we are following this year.

Does that make this the best way to proceed? No. It is not the best way to proceed. But that is not the choice we face. Our troops and their families and our Nation's security deserve a defense bill. The bill before us is right for our troops, for their families, for our Nation's security, and it was produced in a bipartisan manner. Senator INHOFE, my ranking member, is here, and I think he will attest to the fact that we adopted dozens of amendments in our committee work on a bipartisan basis.

This bill deserves a strong bipartisan vote of the Senate today, but to do that the motion to table, which I understand is about to be made, needs to be defeated.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MCCAIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LEVIN. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. MCCAIN. First, I want to thank Senator LEVIN and the Senator from Oklahoma for their leadership and hard work on this legislation, and I congratulate them on the great work they have done.

But could I ask the Senator from Michigan, is this the first time in 51 years that a defense authorization bill will be voted on without debate or any amendment?

Mr. LEVIN. There was debate and amendment on this bill the week before Thanksgiving. So it would not be—

Mr. MCCAIN. Excuse me, without extended debate and addressing the issues of sexual assault, NSA, detainees. Have any of those issues been addressed by debate and amendment on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. LEVIN. Well, the sexual assault amendments which were pending, as my good friend from Arizona knows, were debated. There are about 20-plus sexual assault amendments that are in the bill so it makes major advances in that area.

In terms of the two amendments that I think the Senator is referring to—the amendments of Senator MCCASKILL and Senator GILLIBRAND—there was about a day-long debate on those, and there was an effort to vote on them. I think everybody wanted to vote on those two amendments, but there was objection to it.

In terms of what I believe the Senator is driving at, there was a time—I think it was in 2011 or 2012—when a Defense authorization bill was, in fact, adopted by unanimous consent. I think there was no debate on the bill that was finally adopted.

Having said that, I happen to agree this is not the ideal way to adopt a defense bill. I have said that over and over. And I have pointed out the way in which we tried to at least get some amendments adopted, including about 30 that had been agreed to and had been cleared, but we couldn't even get those added.

Now, with Senator INHOFE's help, we were able to get much of the material in those amendments that were worked out between us and the House leaders so that they are in this bill; not all of the amendments that had been cleared but many of them. But I happen to agree with my friends, this is not the ideal way to proceed. But we are now where we are, and if we simply reopen this bill and do not adopt it the way it is, it then has to go back to the House of Representatives, and then there would not be a defense bill, with all of the then-problems that would be created for our troops and their families. So this is the best we can do, but it is not ideal.

Mr. MCCAIN. Could I finally say to the Senator, I have never seen a process like this before. Maybe there have been some parallels, No. 1, No. 2, here we are on December 19 of 2013 and we passed a bill through the committee in May. So here we are, many months later, taking up a bill because the majority's priorities were obviously not to bring up the Defense authorization bill until it was so late we are forced into this cramped procedure.

There is no doubt—and I thank the Senator and my distinguished chairman—that we haven't debated this bill. We haven't debated NSA. We haven't debated this issue of sexual assaults, with two different opinions here, the sanctions, the detainee issue—all of those issues.

I remember in the markup we said we will wait. It is so important, we will wait and amend this on the floor. So I don't think we have done the men and women who are serving in the military anything but a gross disservice by, in December, having a bill rammed through the Senate, and that is because of a lack of priorities on the part of leadership. We could have taken this bill to the floor of the Senate in June and we didn't. What a shame.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, I know the distinguished ranking member of the Armed Services Committee is here. I would be glad to yield to him, if I can retain the right to the floor. I think he has a few comments he wanted to make in response to the chairman. If I can do that, I would ask unanimous consent to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, let me make a couple of comments here. Oddly enough, I agree with everything the Senator from Arizona said, and the Senator from Texas. It is true. The process was terrible.

I have been here—well, I guess between the House committee and this committee—for 22 years, and I don't think I have ever seen anything like it. But the effort was there to have a bill early on. I know, in working very closely with the chairman—and I have never had an opportunity to work that closely with someone in developing a bill, but we did—that it was his desire to have a bill, and it is still his desire to have a bill. The problem is we went through the option that everyone finds so offensive, and I find so offensive, and it has changed the Senate. The evidence of that is what happened in this bill.

We had people who wanted to have amendments. So what I did, I went on a Thursday—I recall that—to a Republican lunch, and I went there with 25 amendments and I said: Would you all agree to cut your amendment requests, which were over 100, down to 25? If I can take that and show it to the other side, I will see if that is acceptable. They agreed to that.

I want to repeat that. The Republicans agreed to actually 25 amendments. So I went to the other side and I could not get an agreement on the other side. So that effort was there.

As far as the amendments are concerned, the chairman has said several times that we considered these amendments. We did. To be specific, 79 amendments were put in this bill, of which over half were Republican amendments. So we tried our best to put everything in there, and it got down to the point of do we want a bill or do we not want a bill. So I want to emphasize this is not on the merits of the bill.

The bill is a good bill. My colleagues have heard us more than they want to hear us talk about what all is in this bill. It is a good bill. I think it might be better than the bill we passed out, and maybe even the House bill. But nonetheless, it is down to that or nothing. And it is for that reason I think we have to have the bill.

But I agree we have to keep talking about how bad the process was to make sure that it never happens again. We, as the minority, are entitled to have our amendments, the same as the other side, when they become a minority, are going to be entitled to have their amendments.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, to clarify, I believe the Defense authorization bill will pass this evening. That is not in any doubt. The problem is this isn't just about the process, this isn't just about minority rights in the Senate, but this is about people getting hurt. And the people I am talking about are our Active-Duty military whose pensions have been cut by the vote we cast yesterday passing the budget deal. All we want to do is fix that.

There is bipartisan consensus this was a big mistake, and we could pass that, if the majority leader would allow us, today; it would pass through the House, as I said yesterday, like a hot knife through butter. Everyone agrees this was a mistake, and that is what the process is supposed to do, to fix this kind of error before it happens; and now that it has happened, to remedy it through an amendment. But this is exactly what the majority leader is denying us the opportunity to do and why this is so important.

I mention again, so it not be forgotten, the 12 Americans who were killed at Fort Hood some 4 years ago by a domestic terrorist attack, along with 30 others whose lives were changed forever when they were shot by MAJ Nidal Hasan, who had become radicalized by the same cleric whom President Obama targeted on his kill list with a drone attack in Yemen, and appropriately so. He was an agent of al-Qaida. To now call this workplace violence and not to give us a chance to recognize the loss of lives in an act of war and to make sure these patriots get the benefits they are entitled to is just wrong.

So this is not just about the process, it is not just about minority rights, it is about real people getting hurt and our ability to fix that today. That is being denied as a result of this process.

I would conclude by saying the distinguished Senator from Arizona is exactly right. The average number of amendments since 1996 on the national defense authorization bill is 138 amendments—138 amendments. The average number of recorded votes, 11½. The average number of days we are on the bill is 8.8. So this is a big, important, profoundly significant piece of legislation, yet it is being jammed through here in about 24 hours without any opportunity to offer amendments.

Madam President, parliamentary inquiry. Is it correct that no Senator is permitted to offer an amendment to the House-passed Defense bill while the majority leader's motion to concur with a further amendment is pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CORNYN. Further parliamentary inquiry, Madam President. If a motion to table the Reid amendment to concur with a further amendment is successful, would there be an opportunity to offer my amendment, No. 2602, the Fort Hood Purple Heart bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

MOTION TO TABLE THE MOTION TO CONCUR

Mr. CORNYN. Madam President, in order to offer that amendment and others that I believe would be in order and should be allowed to be offered, I move to table the pending Reid motion to concur with a further amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The clerk will call the roll.

ECONOMIC RECOVERY

Mr. FRANKEN. Mr. President, I rise to speak about some of the important work we can be doing to help strengthen our economic recovery and to get more Minnesotans and more Americans across the country into jobs.

During the government shutdown in October, I came to the floor to talk about how the shutdown was preventing us from doing the work that people sent us here to do. Every day we spent on the shutdown was a day we weren't working together to create jobs and to rebuild the middle class. The budget deal we passed this week is far from perfect, but it is my hope it will enable us to stop lurching from crisis to crisis and focus on the work we were sent to do.

This agreement means businesses will have the stability and certainty they need to create jobs and strengthen our economy, and it allows us to focus on educating our kids, creating a 21st century workforce, and putting people back to work.

As I said, this budget deal is far from perfect; it is a compromise and, as with any compromise, it has elements I like, elements I don't like, and elements others like and don't like that may be different. In addition to providing some budgetary certainty for the next 2 years, the budget deal undoes some of the extreme across-the-board cuts of the sequester that will enable us to make more of the critical investments we need to make in education, research and development, and infrastructure. We will make those investments while replacing the irrational cuts of the sequester with more responsible debt and deficit reduction. In fact, the bill ultimately reduces the debt by about $20 billion more than under the previous budget that included the full sequester.

At the same time, I am very troubled by the fact that the bill pays for undoing some of the extreme, across-the-board cuts of the sequester in part by reducing some military pensions. That was something pushed for by the lead Republican negotiator, and I am not happy about it. I believe there are cuts we can make to defense spending, but cutting military pensions is not one of them. That is why I am cosponsoring a bill authored by Senator JEANNE SHAHEEN of New Hampshire that would replace those cuts to military pensions by closing an indefensible and wasteful corporate tax loophole, and I hope we can get that done before the cut to military pensions goes into effect.

I am also very troubled that the budget deal does not include an extension of critical emergency unemployment insurance. Extending this unemployment insurance is one of the things we need to be doing for the economy. Too many Americans remain unemployed, and those who have been unemployed the longest are facing the expiration of their unemployment insurance when they need it the most. There are 65,000 workers in Minnesota and millions throughout our country who may need this extended unemployment insurance in 2014. These folks are struggling. They are struggling to find jobs and to support their families.

Not extending unemployment insurance will also put the brakes on our economic recovery. In 2011, the CBO wrote that aid to the unemployed is among the policies with "the largest effects on output and employment per dollar of budgetary cost." Without an extension the Council of Economic Advisers estimates the economy will generate 240,000 fewer jobs by the end of 2014. That is why I have been working to continue the extension of unemployment insurance and I will keep pushing for the Senate to take up and pass an extension when we return in the new year.

Another thing we should do to strengthen the economy and help working Americans is to raise the minimum wage. We established a minimum wage because we believed that no one should work full-time, contributing to society, and live in poverty. Americans value work. We work more hours on average than citizens in other developed countries. The minimum wage is supposed to help guarantee that if a person works hard and plays by the rules, they at least will have a roof over their head and be able to put food on the table.

This year marks 75 years with a Federal minimum wage. However, today, because the minimum wage is too low, it is not doing what it is supposed to do. Today, a minimum wage worker making $7.25 an hour or about $15,000 per year falls below the poverty line, even though they work 40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year. Inflation has eroded the value of the minimum wage. If the minimum wage had simply kept pace with inflation since 1968—not raised in real terms but just kept pace with inflation—it would be at $10.75 an hour today. That is a wage that would at least keep a family of three above the poverty line.

What has happened to the minimum wage is part of a larger trend for American workers. Over the past 50 years, American workers have increased their productivity by 135 percent—a 135-percent increase. But the value of their wages has not changed, and the real value of the minimum wage has dropped by 33 percent over that same time. Over just the past few years, costs have climbed. Americans are paying more for electricity, rent, auto repair, food, childcare, and many other things. Yet most wages for workers have stagnated and the minimum wage has fallen.

That is why I think one of the most important ways we can boost our economy and help workers and families is to increase the minimum wage. Americans agree. Americans strongly favor boosting the Federal minimum wage to $10.10 an hour. In a recent survey, 63 percent supported raising the minimum wage to $10.10 from the current $7.25 rate. Moreover, the support for increasing the minimum wage is broad-based: The rich, the poor, Republicans and Democrats all believe we should raise the minimum wage.

Increasing the minimum wage will be good for Minnesota, and there is a parallel effort at the State level to increase the State minimum wage. If we increase the Federal minimum wage to $10.10, it will affect 462,000 Minnesota workers over 3 years. That is 18 percent of Minnesota's workforce. It will increase our State's GDP by $400 million. That is something we must fight for.

Extending unemployment benefits and increasing the minimum wage are crucial things we can be doing to support the American value that if you work hard, you should be able to support yourself and your family.

There is more we can be doing. I am part of the Manufacturing Jobs for America initiative that several of my colleagues in the Senate, and headed by the Presiding Officer, have undertaken. As part of that initiative, I wish to speak about an issue I have spoken about on the floor before—an issue I hear about from manufacturers all over Minnesota—the skills gap. What is the skills gap? Recent studies have shown that between one-third and one-half of manufacturers in my State of Minnesota have at least one job they can't fill because they can't find a worker with the right skills to fill that job. That is the skills gap in Minnesota, but it is not just Minnesota. This is a nationwide phenomenon. As I roam this floor to talk to my colleagues, every one of them knows of this phenomenon in their State. A 2011 survey by Deloitte found that there were 600,000 manufacturing jobs nationwide that were unfilled because of a skills shortage.

It is not just manufacturers either. There is a skills gap in information technology, in health care, and in other sectors that have jobs sitting there waiting for skilled workers to fill them. There are more than 3 million jobs in this country that could be filled today if there were workers who had the right skills. With too many Americans unemployed, we have to find a way to fill those jobs.

The thing is we know how to solve this problem. We are taking steps to solve it in communities in Minnesota and around the country through partnerships between businesses and community and technical colleges that are training up workers and getting them into high-demand jobs right away.

Let me talk briefly about an innovative program to bridge the skills gap in Minnesota. I recently visited the Right Skills Now Program at the Dunwoody College of Technology in Minneapolis and the South Central Community and Technical College in Mankato. Those two institutions are working on this together.

At South Central I sat with about 8 to 10 manufacturers who had helped fund and design their program that gives workers the skills they need to operate a computer numerical control, or CNC, machine. They told me that between 8 or 10 of them they had more than 50 job openings they could fill that instant. At Dunwoody, their current placement rate from the Right Skills Now Program is 91 percent. You will have a hard time finding a more effective program.

Dunwoody likes to emphasize that its students often come into the program after having just been laid off or that they are the long-term unemployed we hear about. After going through the program, they are placing 91 percent of them into good jobs in a growing industry here in this country.

They told me about a student who had a successful career as a massage therapist. He was doing just fine until he began to experience pain from pre-arthritis symptoms. That spells trouble for a massage therapist. So he researched technical programs and joined Right Skills Now, and after going through the program he relaunched his career as a machinist.

Careers are different from what they were a generation ago. Very few people stay working in one job for one company for their entire life anymore. Whether it is because of changing life circumstances such as the massage therapist turned machinist, or because of new technologies, most workers have many different jobs over the course of their working life now, and those jobs require many different skills. We need a workforce development system that is agile enough to keep up with those changing demands.

That is essential not just so workers will be able to get the different skills they need over the course of their working lives; it is also going to be one of the keys to the United States remaining globally competitive. If our workers cannot adapt to the new industries that are constantly forming, we will lose those jobs to our global competitors. There is no better way to anticipate and to react to these changes than to connect businesses directly with our schools to get workers exactly what they need.

This is also about college affordability. I have talked before about Erick Ajax, the CEO of EJ Ajax and Sons, a metal stamping and sheet metal fabrication company in Fridley, MN, that was founded by Erick's grandfather in 1945. Erick and other manufacturers partnered with Hennepin Technical College in Hennepin County to set up M-Powered, a fast-track training program to get workers what they need for entry-level advanced manufacturing jobs.

Erick gave me an example of one of his workers that I found exciting. This is what excites me, and not because it is extraordinary; it is because it is something we can duplicate over and over in this country. When he hires employees from these business-technical college partnerships, the way he looks at it is that they are on a career ladder that would otherwise not be available. He told me about one such hire, who was really good at his job. So Erick sent him back to school to get his associate's degree. The guy came back to work, continued to be a star, and a few years later Erick paid for him to go to the University of Minnesota, where he got his bachelor's degree. The guy is now head of quality control for EJ Ajax, an incredibly high-skilled job at an advanced manufacturing company.

Now, understand, this guy graduated from college with no debt—zero debt—with a great job. When I think about college affordability, I think about that story.

As I have said, we have a skills gap problem in manufacturing and other industries, and we have these partnerships that are successfully working to close that gap. So where do we come here in Congress? Well, I have gone around to Minnesota's community and technical colleges and talked to businesses, I have had roundtables, and I have talked to national experts in our State and from around the country, and the fact is we are not doing this fast enough. Sometimes these partnerships could do a lot more, train up a lot more people, with some extra funding—maybe to buy a really sophisticated machine or to hire an instructor with very specialized skills.

So what I am proposing is a competitive grant program in a bill called the Community College to Career Fund Act. Under this program, businesses and community colleges would apply for grants based on how many jobs their partnership would create, what the value of those jobs would be to those hired, to their company, to the community, and how much skin do the businesses have in the game or maybe how much the community colleges and the businesses and the State have in the game.

We have millions of open jobs that cannot be filled because of a skills shortage, and we know these partnerships are the most direct way to fill those jobs. We know that existing partnerships are not doing enough and cannot do enough, and they need more resources in order to truly meet the need that exists. So that is exactly what my bill would address.

As we move forward with this budget deal, let's build on the progress it represents and set our sights a little higher. Let's support working families and help people who are struggling to find a job in today's slowly recovering economy. Let's help students and young people who have been held back by slow job growth get a foothold in the economy. Let's support partnerships between businesses and community and technical colleges to fill the jobs that are out there. Let's make this coming year the year that Congress works for Americans and puts Americans back to work.

Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The assistant majority leader.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, first let me commend my colleague from Minnesota and tell him that I proudly cosponsor his legislation. I have had visits throughout my State with community colleges and have watched this work, where they literally bring employers and future employees together at a community college—an affordable community college—they get the very best training, really focused on the job opening, and when it is finished, they go right to work and they make a good salary.

I tell you, I think this is the future. This is an excellent idea. I was happy to support it. I have shamelessly stolen it and said it was my idea in a few places, but I will confess to the Senator on the floor—

Mr. FRANKEN. It is an honor for me to acknowledge that the Senator has stolen my idea.

Mr. DURBIN. I want to tell him that I am going to admit this on the floor and give him credit but be happy to join him in this effort.

Mr. FRANKEN. I thank the Senator. And in Illinois the Senator is free to say it is his idea.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Senator very much.

THE DREAM ACT

Mr. President, maybe we will be in session 24 hours, 48 hours, 72 hours, and then we are finished, the year 2013 comes to a close. The unfortunate thing from where I am standing is we have missed an opportunity. About 6 months ago, we passed a comprehensive immigration reform bill. It had been 25 years in the making.

We know our immigration system is broken. We know it is unfair. We know people are suffering because of it. And we know we can do better. So we came together and 68 of us voted on the floor of the Senate, about 6 months ago, to pass comprehensive immigration reform.

I worked on that bill with seven colleagues—four Democrats, four Republicans. We came up with a good bill, not a bill I agree with in all of its specifics, but one that I think is a good, fair compromise.

We sent it to the House of Representatives. They have done nothing—nothing. They made some statements—some encouraging, some discouraging. The fact is, they never called this bill.

Mr. President, 2014 is another opportunity for the House of Representatives to rise to this challenge, and I hope they will.

There are many parts of that bill that are so essential—strengthening our border, a very important issue to all Americans, particularly on the other side of the aisle; a pathway to citizenship, just a matter of simple, elemental justice, which is a passion on our side of the aisle. We brought those two concepts together to make the bill work.

But included in those concepts is an idea which I introduced into legislation about 13 years ago. It was called the DREAM Act. It basically said if you came to the United States as a child, were brought here in undocumented status or overstayed a visa and were here undocumented, finished high school, had no serious criminal background, we would give you a chance, a chance to earn your way to citizenship—legality and citizenship.

Last week, I visited a group on the Mall who were fighting for immigration reform. Since the middle of November, these immigration, faith, and labor leaders have been fasting, urging the House of Representatives to take up this responsibility and pass the immigration bill.

Their commitment to fighting for immigration reform has inspired people all across this Nation to join the movement and to tell stories about families torn apart by the broken immigration law in America.

We cannot ignore the injustice of this system and the suffering that millions of people in our own country are living with.

I want to urge Speaker BOEHNER to move forward on immigration reform in 2014. I understand there is a small, very vocal, very negative minority of his caucus that refuses to support any change in immigration law. But that is nothing new. In our Nation of immigrants, there has always been that force at work. In the time of Abraham Lincoln's Presidency, they even had a political party. It was the Know-Nothing Party. They opposed immigrants. They opposed Catholics. They were virtually against everything. Lincoln campaigned against them, and eventually they disappeared from the American political scene. But their sentiments can always be found at every point in our history.

The one part of this immigration bill, as I mentioned earlier, that is near and dear to me is the DREAM Act. I fought to pass it for 12 years. There were times when we called the DREAM Act on the floor of the U.S. Senate, and I would look up in the gallery and it would be filled with young people, men and women wearing graduation gowns and mortar boards, to remind people that they were undocumented, officially unwelcome in America, and yet their heart was here and their lives have been spent here and they were just asking for a chance to be part of our future. Some heartbreaking moments when the amendment was defeated on the floor of the Senate and I met with them; some encouraging moments when the comprehensive bill passed and included the strongest DREAM Act language that we have ever written.

For most of their lives, these young people have been trapped in the shadows, fearing they could be deported at any moment and facing obstacles to developing their talents in this country. Isn't it ironic that we have invested so much already in their lives—educating them, giving them an opportunity to thrive in this Nation—and then, right at that moment when they are ready to go to college or go into a job—we tell them: Leave. We do not want you. That is not right. It is not fair. It does not make any sense.

Last year, President Obama did something that was significant. He announced his administration would grant temporary legal status to these immigrant students who grew up in the United States. This historic program is known as DACA. DACA stands for Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals. It gave the DREAMers a chance to come out of the shadows and be part of America. In the last year, more than 567,000 people have applied for this DACA status; 460,000 have received it.

Later today or tomorrow, the Senate will vote on the nomination of Alejandro Mayorkas to be Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, which I will support.

As Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, Mr. Mayorkas has been charged with implementing DACA, the President's Executive order. It was a complicated job, but Mr. Mayorkas did it in an outstanding way.

Earlier this week my colleague and friend Senator GRASSLEY of Iowa spoke on the floor about Mr. Mayorkas and the DACA program. I wish to take a moment to respond to some of the things he said in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Senator GRASSLEY initially questioned the legality of this DACA program. I want to be clear. DACA is entirely appropriate and legal. Throughout our history, our government has decided which persons should be prosecuted and which ones would not be prosecuted based on law enforcement priority and available resources. Past administrations of both political parties have stopped deportations of low-priority cases. Courts have long recognized their authority to do that.

In a decision last year striking down Arizona's immigration laws, the Court reaffirmed that the Federal Government has broad authority over who is going to be deported. Republican-appointed Justice Anthony Kennedy, who wrote the opinion, said: "A principle feature of the removal system is the broad discretion exercised by immigration officials."

The President's action is not just legal, it is smart. It is realistic. Today there are millions of undocumented immigrants in the United States. The government has to set priorities. Those with criminal records, serious criminal records, should leave. They should be deported—no excuses. Under the Obama administration's policy, that is a high priority. That is the way it should be.

Senator GRASSLEY also claimed on the floor that the immigration service has not released adequate information about the DACA program. I disagree with my colleague and friend. USCIS has been transparent about this process, publishing data on its Web site showing the number of applicants who applied and those who have been accepted and rejected.

For the past few years I have come to the floor of the Senate regularly to tell real-life stories of those DREAMers. I have done it over 50 times. We actually had a reunion of the DREAMers I have spoken of on the floor of the Senate. I want to take some time today to update the story of one of those DREAMers.

This is a photograph of two brothers, Carlos and Rafael. They are siblings who were brought to the United States by their parents when they were kids. Carlos grew up in suburban Chicago, graduated from Palatine High School, where he was an honors student. In high school Carlos was captain of the tennis team, a member of the varsity swim team. He volunteered with Palatine's Physically Challenged Program, where every day he helped feed lunch to special needs students.

Listen to what one of Carlos's high school teachers said about him:

Carlos is the kind of person we want among us because he makes the community better. This is the kind of kid you want as a student, the kind of kid you want as a neighbor, the kind of kid you want as a friend to your child and, most germane to his present circumstance, the kind of person you want as an American.

It is good news. Last week Carlos graduated from Loyola University in Chicago, majoring in education. His lifelong dream was to be a teacher. It almost did not come true. You see, last year Carlos and his brother Rafael were placed in deportation proceedings. They were going to be expelled from the United States. I asked the Obama administration to reconsider. They decided to suspend the deportation. That was the right thing to do. After graduating from Loyola University, Carlos was offered a teaching position starting in just a few weeks. Carlos will be teaching at Schurz High School, a Chicago public school on the northwest side. In addition to his teaching duties, Carlos will also be helping with the school's DREAMers organization and the tennis team, a sport he knew well from high school.

There is no question that we need the best and brightest to teach in our schools. We need people like Carlos who are committed to the next generation of tomorrow's leaders.

Teach for America knows that great teachers can come from all walks of life, from graduating seniors in our Nation's most elite colleges, to former investment bankers and veterans. Last week Teach for America announced that it plans to actively recruit DREAMers who have received DACA deferment, so more DREAMers like Carlos will be able to give back to the country they know. They will be in classrooms not only teaching the important subjects, but with their very lives they will be teaching the next generation of Americans what immigration has always meant to this country.

I ask my colleagues who stand on the floor critical of the administration's deportation policies, would America be better off if Carlos had been deported last year? Would Chicago be better off if this bright, idealistic young teacher was not headed to the classrooms in a few weeks to try to help educate the next generation of leaders in this country? Of course not.

To hear Carlos's story is to realize the benefits immigration reform will bring to America. Imagine what is going to happen when 11 million undocumented immigrants have the opportunity to step out of the shadows, like these DREAMers, and contribute fully to America. Imagine what it will mean to them to no longer live in fear of a knock on the door, to be able to declare who they are, where they live, who is in their family, to be able to work without any fear, to be able to travel, to go back to important family events in other countries and return to the United States.

Legalization will unleash the earning potential of millions of people. They will be able to pursue jobs that match their skills instead of working in the underground economy.

It is the right thing to do. It will make America stronger. I am confident that wiser voices will prevail in the House of Representatives.

Just the other day I had a conference call with Catholic bishops. They have made this a special effort on their part to support comprehensive immigration reform. They were from all over the United States. In addition to their prayers, I asked them to reach out to their congregations, tell stories like Carlos's story and Rafael's story, and tell people this is really very fundamental and basic when it comes to issues of justice.

FOR-PROFIT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES

Mr. President, I have come to the floor I cannot tell you how many times to talk about an industry in America—the for-profit college and university industry. I have talked about the basics. Most people could not tell you what for-profit colleges are or which ones are for-profit. Well, the major colleges—I will start at the top with the Apollo Group, the University of Phoenix, and DeVry out of Illinois is second. Kaplan, which was owned by the Washington Post, is third. There are a lot of other ones.

What is interesting about these colleges and universities is they could not exist without generous subsidies from the Federal Government. Here is what happens. They lure students into enrolling in their schools. The students, often because they are low income, qualify for Pell grants and student loans. The Pell grants and student loans flow from the government through the student into the for-profit schools.

It turns out there is a 90-10 rule. Imagine this. These for-profit schools cannot take more than 90 percent of their revenue from the Federal Government—90 percent. They are 10 percent away from being a total Federal agency. But they make amazing amounts of money, huge amounts of money. They pay their CEOs millions of dollar because this is a very lucrative undertaking.

But there are three things you should remember about for-profit schools—three numbers. You will know what the challenge is if you remember these three numbers:

Twelve. Twelve percent of all the graduates of high school go to for-profit schools.

Twenty-five. Twenty-five percent of all the Federal aid for education goes to these schools.

Forty-seven. Forty-seven percent of all the student loan defaults are with students who have enrolled in these for-profit schools.

So 12 percent of the students, 25 percent of the Federal aid for education, and 47 percent of the student loan defaults.

Why are these students defaulting? There are several reasons. One reason is that the diplomas from these schools are not worth much. I will tell a few stories in a moment. The other reason is that once the school enrolls these students and brings in their student loans, they really do not care that much as to whether they finish. It is not that important to them. The money has already flowed to the school. A third reason, of course, is that many of these students finish school, and with their questionable or worthless diplomas, they cannot find jobs. What happens then? They cannot make their student loan payments.

I will tell some specific stories when I talk about one of these for-profit school operations. It is called Corinthian Colleges, which is a publicly traded corporation that owns for-profit schools in the United States and Canada. It is now in the spotlight for engaging in manipulative marketing and deceptive job-placement practices.

Earlier this week, a Huffington Post article called attention to these abuses. It was entitled "How a For-Profit College Created Fake Jobs to Get Taxpayer Money." The headline says the whole story. The article reports that Corinthian has been encouraging the manipulation of job-placement rates to entice students to sign up for programs and to avoid the scrutiny of the government and the accreditors.

Corinthian College subsidiaries—Everest College is one of them—have been criticized in the past for having high dropout rates and some of the highest 3-year loan default rates in America even while its tuition rates are higher than community colleges or even flagship State schools for an equivalent degree. In spite of the bad press, Corinthian Colleges—such as Everest—have managed to come out on top, increasing enrollment, increasing profit margins, and increasing payments for their executives. It would appear these gains were at least in part due to the manipulative marketing practices and a corporate culture of deceit toward its students.

According to this article, Eric Parmis enrolled in Everest College's heating, ventilation, and air-conditioning repair program in the summer of 2011. Eric had been laid off from his job. He was attracted to Everest because of the promise from its advertisements and recruiters that their HVAC program would lead to a good job and a decent living. So Eric picked up his family—his wife and two sons—and he moved from Ohio to Georgia to enroll in this Corinthian school, the Everest College program. He was a good student. Eric received all A's, only missing one class on the day his 7-year-old son was diagnosed with leukemia. After completing the 9-month program, Eric Parmis was left with a $17,000 student loan debt and could not find a job.

What Eric did not know was Everest College was paying more than a dozen local employers what they called an on-boarding allowance of $2,000 a head to secure 30 days of employment for their graduates. These were not real jobs; these were jobs which Corinthian Colleges—Everest College—were frankly bankrolling so it looked as if their graduates were going to work. The money was purportedly a fee to help pay for things such as training and uniforms. In reality, by paying companies to take graduates for temporary jobs, the Everest College was able to boost its official job-placement rate unrealistically. This helped Everest College continue to fly under the radar of its accreditors.

However, Corinthian paid companies for jobs without considering the long-term effects on students. The fact that they would sign them up for 30 days and then turn them loose really did not mean that much to Corinthian; they just had to show that they went to work at some point.

Well, after he graduated Eric had to beg the school's career service counselor to even set up interviews. Even then, he would arrive at interviews supposedly set up for him, and the potential employers would tell him they had never heard of Everest College. Remember, Eric Parmis was on the hook for $17,000 in student loans for this course he took.

Finally, Eric was set up by career services to work in a contract position with ADG Enterprises laying electrical wires. After less than 2 months on the job, he was laid off and cut off from career services from Everest. Everest had used him to get $17,000 in student loans and turned him loose without a job, without a future.

In fact, managers discouraged career counselors at Everest from re-placing people who had already been placed in a job. They were instead encouraged to send graduates to companies with high turnover rates, to provide temporary positions just so they could show that their graduates went to work even if it was just for a few days. The school had effectively placed Eric in a short-term internship program. Once it was over, there was no incentive for them to keep him. They turned him loose to vacate a space for another graduate and another $2,000 check. Then Everest would shuffle another graduate into the same position to artificially maintain that they were placing students in jobs. This was fraud—not just a fraud on the public, not just a fraud on the students, but a fraud on American taxpayers by Corinthian Colleges.

Eric lost out on the deal—a $17,000 debt for a training degree he could not use. To get a Georgia HVAC contractor license, he needed to have significant work experience and references, and no one would hire him because they did not take his degree from Everest—part of the Corinthian College system—seriously.

The practice of paying employers to hire graduates from this Everest campus ended in 2011, but it was not the only Corinthian school engaging in these practices. The California attorney general recently filed suit against Corinthian for using fraudulent marketing, paying companies to temporarily hire graduates, and using other tactics to meet accreditation standards and job-placement rates. These other tactics included paying temporary agencies to hire graduates for temporary positions while basically counting a 1-day volunteer event for dental assistant graduates as a job placement and, worse yet, "placing" graduates at nonexistent businesses they created as part of a class project to design business cards.

It was a big game for Corinthian, and they got paid off handsomely by Federal taxpayers and these unsuspecting students.

Corinthian has also outright misrepresented job placement rates to students by advertising numbers substantially higher than their actual rates. These deceptive practices give the illusion that this is a successful undertaking. Go to Everest and get a job. It turns out that it is a charade.

In addition to manipulation of job placement rates, recruiters for Corinthian colleges and schools withhold pertinent information from students to get them to enroll.

Lindsay Ryan, another student at Everest College who contacted my office, studied criminal justice online and was 12 weeks away from graduation when she learned that Everest was not regionally accredited and that she wouldn't be able to find a job in her field in the State of Illinois.

One would think that a college offering courses to people in Illinois would have some obligation to tell them whether or not a degree or certificate from that school could lead to a job in that State?

In Lindsay's case it didn't.

Do you know what Everest College suggested to Lindsay after she had been duped into this so-called education? They suggested she move to Florida where she might be able to use an Everest College degree. That wasn't an option for Lindsay and her family.

Now she sits, unemployed, supporting three children, her husband, and a $24,000 student loan debt to this Corinthian college, Everest College, for a worthless degree.

Over the past decade Corinthian colleges have received from the Federal Government nearly $10 billion in student aid—$10 billion. That makes up more than 80 percent of the total revenue of this college. These schools, these for-profit schools, are sucking on the Federal Treasury to come up with billions of dollars to get rich at the expense of taxpayers and these poor exploited students.

Corinthian grew during our recession, reaching a peak enrollment of 93,000 students, doubling revenue up to $1.7 billion in 2011. This is in part due to a persuasive but deceptive marketing plan promising a better career to people such as Eric and Lindsay who were looking for a way out during difficult times.

Toya Smith, a former Everest career counselor who was interviewed by Huffington Post, recognized that for-profit schools burden students with large debts, a questionable degree, and poor job prospects—while the company was profiting on Federal dollars.

She said: “You’re selling a dream to a student that you know, in reality, they are not ever going to realize.”

Did I mention Toya was a former counselor at Everest? She told the truth.

How many more times will Corinthian end up in the news for deplorable stories such as these? I have asked the CEO of Corinthian to explain these practices. His name is Massimino. He was paid more than $3 million in total compensation the last year that was reported by this corporation. I have asked him not to engage in this conduct again.

I have also written to Everest College’s national accreditors, the Accrediting Council for Independent Colleges and Schools and the Accrediting Commission of Career Schools and Colleges, asking what steps they are going to take to sanction Everest for these egregious abuses of the public trust.

Finally, I have asked the Secretary of Education, Arne Duncan, to look into these allegations and to use whatever authorities the Department may have to hold Everest and its parent company, Corinthian, accountable.

If no authorities exist, I have asked him to work with me in Congress to give the Department the ability to respond more aggressively to abuses such as the ones I have outlined for Corinthian.

It is time to put an end to the corporate culture of deception and data manipulation that pervades the for-profit school industry. They are wasting taxpayers’ dollars. They are abusing students and their families. We in Congress are not doing what we should.

We have to protect these students and their families. We have to protect America’s taxpayers from for-profit schools that are taking advantage of the law.

I yield the floor and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ISAKSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ISAKSON. I ask unanimous consent to address the Senate as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TRIBUTE TO PAUL YATES

Mr. ISAKSON. Merry Christmas to the Presiding Officer and to all those who might be watching C-SPAN.

We are getting close to the big holiday, and it is a time when I come to the well to pay tribute to a great newsman in Georgia who is retiring after 40 years in television on the Georgia beat: Paul Yates, with WAGA-TV, Fox 5, in Atlanta. He has served for 35 consecutive years at the same station.

In fact, when I ran for Governor in Georgia in 1990 he covered that race. He has covered all of my Senate races, and he covered all of my legislative races. When we were in the legislature and in session, he covered every day of the Georgia legislature and has for over three decades.

He has made a tremendous contribution to our State and the level, quality, and respect for the very best that journalism can expect. As Paul Yates retires from his service after years of service to the people of Georgia at WAGA-TV, and as one who he has covered—both good and bad—I wish to pay tribute to a great journalist, a great friend, and a man who has done a great service to the people of my State of Georgia.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARKEY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. President, let me first comment about the National Defense Authorization Act. It is an important bill for us to pass, and I wish to thank Senator LEVIN and Senator INHOFE for the manner in which they worked on this legislation, bringing it together in the committee. It was a bipartisan bill. As it came to the floor it maintained that focus on helping our troops and helping preserve our national security. As we were starting to consider amendments, I think some cooperation was there. Unfortunately, we lost track of being able to consider amendments in a somewhat normal course.

But the bill before us represents a bipartisan effort to make sure we provide the men and women who are defending our Nation the tools they need in order to carry out their mission, and we give them the support they deserve for serving their country. So this bill is a critically important bill, and I am glad that with the earlier vote, we are on track to send this to the President for his signature before the end of the year. It is very important. The bill provides many important provisions for the health care of our troops, many important provisions for their compensation, and it is important we get that done before January 1.

The bill also provides the tools they need and the direction they need in terms of foreign policy in our military.

I wish to thank the committee. Several of the suggestions I made during the committee process were incorporated in the bill that came to the floor. I have the honor of chairing the East Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and serving with the distinguished Presiding Officer who also serves on that subcommittee. In that capacity we worked with the committee to deal with some of the issues in that region, provisions dealing with the health care of our military personnel and many of the other issues. I am glad to see the committee did incorporate some of the concerns that had been expressed.

Two specific amendments I had noted during the amendment process have been incorporated in the bill that is before us. One deals with health care and the other deals with parity between our civilian workforce for the Department of Defense and our contract workforce. I appreciate that those two amendments have been incorporated into the bill we have before us.

Similar to many of my colleagues who have come to the floor, I am disappointed. On any bill that comes forward that is a bipartisan bill there are compromises and there will always be disappointments about not being exactly everything you want it to be.

That is understandable. What is very disappointing is that we didn’t have a chance to offer many amendments that are not controversial. The only way an amendment could get on after it came through the committee was through a clearing process, and I think there are many other amendments that could have gotten into this bill that would have been important, but I will look for other opportunities.

I had three amendments that I will mention now that I will look for other opportunities to advance. One comes directly out of the subcommittee I chair, and that deals with maritime security issues in the China seas. That is a powder keg, where China most recently took steps in regard to airspace that only made that situation even more tense. The maintaining of maritime security is critically important to the United States. It is the major shipping lane for commerce not only in that region but globally, and it is an area that could bring about unfortunate conflicts between many countries in that region which could mushroom into active situations. So maritime security is a very important issue, and the United States has taken a very active position on that to say: Look. These matters have to be talked about directly by the countries involved in a peaceful manner, not in an intimidating manner. The amendment I offered would have furthered the Senate in supporting that position.

I was also disappointed not to be able to offer an amendment which dealt with the accountability particularly of Assad in Syria but also of those who have committed war crimes in Syria. The Presiding Officer knows of the testimony we have had in regard to the gross violation of human rights by government officials in Syria and the numbers of people who have been killed and have suffered as a result.

The War Crimes Tribunal at The Hague should have the ability to deal with these types of issues, and the amendment I offered asked that the United States work for full accountability for those who have violated international standards in regard to war crimes.

A third amendment I had offered that did not get in because of reasons I just mentioned was an effort that many are working on to form a partnership between the United States and Vietnam in regard to education programs—higher education. We have a way to do that. Senator MCCAIN was very helpful to me in trying to advance this, and we will look for another opportunity to get that done because I think it is critically important.

Many of us understand we have to improve the relationship between the United States and Vietnam, but Vietnam needs to deal with its human rights violations. It needs to deal with its good governance. One way we can help this is by dealing with institutions that promote democracy, and that is, of course, higher education.

So while I am looking forward, with regard to all those areas, to finding other vehicles where we can deal with the issues we were not able to deal with through the amendment process, I would ask our colleagues to get this bill to the President so he can sign it before the end of this year.

THANKING ELISE MELLINGER

Mr. President, I would also like to make a few comments about Elise Mellinger. As I mentioned earlier, Elise is a Pearson Foreign Service officer fellow. Let me explain what that means. She is an experienced member of the Department of State's Foreign Service. She served in India, Indonesia, and Singapore. She is a person who has served our country for many years, and she is a career diplomat at the State Department.

For the past year, she has been assigned to my Senate office and has acted as a valuable member of my staff. That helps our career diplomats understand the congressional process better, but it also gives us the opportunity to have an experienced individual who truly understands the workings of diplomacy to be in our offices and help us carry out our responsibilities.

In Elise's case, that was particularly helpful to me because at the beginning of this year I took on the new responsibility as the chair of the East Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee. Throughout my career in Congress, I have spent a lot of time in Europe. I have chaired the U.S. Helsinki Commission, and I have traveled extensively to Europe, but it was a new venture for me to chair the East Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee. Elise Mellinger brought me the expertise so we could—the Senate and the Committee on Senate Foreign Relations—carry out our responsibility in regard to congressional oversight and initiatives in regard to that region of the world.

As a result of her hard work, we were able to have numerous hearings in 2013 on the rebalance to the Asia initiative President Obama brought forward, and to talk about many of the issues in that region of the world, from the maritime security issues I have already talked about to environmental issues, to dealing with North Korea, a huge problem with not only their nuclearizing the Korean Peninsula, which is unacceptable, but the human rights violations in that country and how the people are being treated as far as economic growth, and the list goes on and on.

Vietnam is a major country of interest. We have been able to be involved in that. We had a hearing on the typhoon in the Philippines that Elise Mellinger was critically important in helping us put together in a matter of days so we could become knowledgeable as to what was happening with one of our allies in that region—the Philippines—and what we could do and what the international community and the private sector could do in order to help the people of the Philippines. I traveled to that region, and Elise Mellinger was extremely important in preparing me for that trip.

So I just wanted to share with my colleagues this program we have, where we have executive employees, career diplomats who come and work in our offices so we can work together and advance foreign policy in the United States. There should not be a difference between the executive and legislative branches in regard to our objective with foreign policy. Of course, we have oversight; of course, we have separation of powers; and for the entire year Elise Mellinger was in my office she was a 100-percent loyal person among our staff to carry out that responsibility. As I said to her earlier, I hope it does not affect her career when she goes back to the State Department, and I know it will not.

I was very fortunate, indeed the Senate and I believe the American people were very fortunate, that Elise spent the year in service to her country through the Senate. She will be leaving very shortly, at the end of this month. So I wish to thank her, her family, her husband, Elliott Wu and her daughter, Eitana Wu for sharing Elise Mellinger with us. We wish her well. We are going to miss her. She is going on to return to the Canadian desk within the State Department before she accepts her next mission that will most likely be outside the United States.

On behalf of all my colleagues in the Senate, I want to express my thanks and appreciation to Elise Mellinger.

With that, I yield the floor.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. President, this week the Senate is considering a couple of fairly big items. We had a vote earlier this week on a budget proposal to fund the government for the next couple of years, and we also are going to be voting on a defense authorization bill that is very important to America's national security interests.

As we brought this legislation to the floor, there has been something conspicuously and noticeably absent; that is, open debate—something that used to be taken for granted in the Senate, a right that was accorded to Senators.

The nice thing about getting to the Senate, when you come from the House of Representatives, is that when you get to the Senate, one person can actually have the opportunity to get amendments voted on and have those amendments debated. In the House of Representatives, those of us who have served there, know there is a rules committee, and the rules committee decides what comes to the floor, what amendments are made in order, and how much time is allowed for debate on each amendment. It is a very structured process.

What the Founders conceived for the Senate was something different. They wanted us to have an opportunity to openly debate the big issues of the day. And there are no bigger issues, I would argue, than the budget proposal which will fund the government for the next 2 years and spend literally billions and trillions of dollars of the American people's tax money; and the Defense authorization bill, which will authorize in this case over half a trillion dollars of spending of the American taxpayers' money.

So these are big, consequential pieces of legislation brought to the floor of the Senate but not open to the debate, not open to the amendment process.

We just heard the Senator from Maryland talk about amendments which, if he had the chance to offer, he would have offered. That applies to a lot of us.

The Defense bill, when it comes to the floor here, will have probably gone through a fairly good vetting process. I served on the Armed Services Committee for 6 years. I think they did then and do now a good job of prioritizing when they come to the floor. But we have to remember, there are only probably 25 or so members of the Armed Services Committee, which means there are 75 Senators who haven't had an opportunity to have their voices heard on such a big piece of legislation.

The same thing with the budget. The budget conference really consisted of a couple people. In fact, I am told by conferees who were members of the Budget Committee and were supposed to be members of that conference, they really didn't vote on it. There was no vote on it when it left the conference. It was negotiated by a couple of people and brought to the floor to be voted on—something that is pretty darned important to the future of this country but not open to amendment, no opportunity for Senators here to have the opportunity to improve upon. Perhaps we could improve upon it; maybe we couldn't. But we at least should have had the opportunity to bring issues to the forefront that rightly should be debated when we are talking about something like a 2-year budget and a defense bill which spends enormous amounts of the American people's tax dollars.

So no debate. Shut down here in the Senate by the majority leader. Why? I guess because it is really critically important we get to some of these nominations that need to be voted on—voted on before the Christmas holiday. Why? Well, because, Lord knows, we couldn't vote on them next year. I guess we can vote on them next year. Now that the majority has broken the rules here in the Senate, changed the rules, they can approve those with 51 votes.

So I don't know what the big sense of urgency is on these nominations that would prevent us from having a full and open debate on something as consequential as the Defense authorization bill or the budget just being voted on here in the Senate. I don't know why these nominations would take precedence over that.

It seems to me that if there was any sense of urgency attached to this, most Members on both sides I think would acknowledge that we need to do that. But clearly these are all nominees who could be voted on next year, and now approved with 51 votes, thanks to the majority breaking the rules in the Senate and making it possible to approve nominees with 51 votes.

So the very notion, as the majority leader came out here and said repeatedly now, that we would be here next week on one of the most important Christian holidays of the year voting on nominees that can be voted on a week later after the first of the year when Congress comes back into session—it seems to me to be really sort of stunning in terms of its audacity.

I think the American people would conclude the same thing; that we would take a defense authorization bill, that we would take a huge budget bill and actually sort of just try and sweep them under the carpet, fill the tree so we don't have an opportunity to debate amendments or vote on amendments, but then have to rush to get these nominations through, nominations which can be considered early next year and approved now with a 51-vote majority.

So think about that. We have had these threats here on the floor. The majority leader has come to the floor and said: We are going to be here Christmas Eve because we have got to do these nominations. Yet we don't have any time to do the important work, such as having a chance to debate and vote on amendments to bills such as the Defense authorization bill.

So that is where we are. Again, I think it is pretty stunning that this is what the Senate has deteriorated into. And it is regrettable. But hopefully—hopefully—at some point people will come to their senses that: Yes, this is an important week next week for a lot of people around this country; that perhaps being able to do the nominations a week later, after the first of the year, when they can be approved with 51 votes, that might make sense and might be a reasonable approach to take with all this.

I hope most Members here, like most Americans, next week at least have an opportunity to celebrate the Christmas holiday with their families. And as they do, a lot of Americans will use that opportunity to reflect upon the past year. In many cases that will mean life changes which occurred in the last year. For many Americans it might be a marriage in the family, it might be a graduation, events that we celebrate. It might be something we look on with reflection and mourn the loss of a loved one. But this is a time when normally people around this country reflect on significant changes in their lives in the last year and start thinking in anticipation about what the next year might bring.

Some things people can't control in their lives. Some changes people don't like and they can do nothing to control. And as they start thinking about last year and start thinking about next year, for a lot of people it is going to be the impact that ObamaCare is going to have on their lives. People are thinking about the fact that they have these skyrocketing premiums that are now coupled with these outrageous deductibles. The sticker shock is forcing millions of Americans to pay more for health care.

President Obama promised the American people:

ObamaCare will cut costs and make coverage more affordable for families and small businesses.

Well, the reality is that family premiums have already skyrocketed since ObamaCare became law. American approval of this law is now in the tank.

According to a recent CBS/New York Times poll:

Most uninsured (57 percent) think the cost of their health care will increase, and just 23 percent expect the quality to get better.

Think about that. Fifty-seven percent of the people who have no insurance—people who are uninsured—think the cost of their health care is going to increase. And a majority in that same poll are opposed to the health care plan. Those are people who don't have health care insurance today, and a majority of them are opposed to this plan.

For many Americans, the holiday season is going to be filled with angst and uncertainty as they look at facing a coverage gap on January 1. More than 10,000 Iowans were told by healthcare.gov that they should qualify for Federal health coverage, but Federal officials have not yet sent complete information on those people to State administrators, who are supposed to then review the applications and enroll people in the program.

My colleague from Iowa Senator GRASSLEY is on the floor. Constituents he represents are going to be filled with a lot of uncertainty as they face the future. According to the Des Moines Register, Percy Smith of Des Moines is concerned about a coverage gap:

I'm losing my optimism, because we're getting close to January, and I don't know if I'm going to be covered or not.

But this problem will affect more than Iowans. According to the Washington Post:

Those facing a potential coverage gap include an estimated 15 million people.

The law's insurance cancellations mixed with the Web site's problems might leave some people who have coverage now uninsured in the new year. These are Obamacare's biggest losers.

Today, George Will has an article in the Washington Post that explores this administration's abuse of executive discretion. The article effectively summarizes the exact abuses of executive power that my colleagues and I have been vocally opposed to.

Under this administration, if they don't like what the law says, even if they wrote that law, they simply ignore it. Example after example exists of how this President believes he is above the law. Look no further than their delay of the employer mandate or their rewrite of the laws governing the work requirements as a condition of receiving welfare. As Mr. Will says in his article:

In 1998, the Supreme Court held that "there is no provision in the Constitution that authorizes the president to enact, to amend, or to repeal statutes."

Yet, as Mr. Will further points out, this President often claims:

... he can't wait for our system of separated powers to ratify his policy preferences.

Unfortunately, that is not how our country was founded and not what our forefathers established in our system of governance.

As the Federalist Paper No. 47, authored by James Madison, says:

The accumulation of all powers, legislative, executive, and judiciary, in the same hands, whether of one, a few, or many, and whether hereditary, self-appointed, or elective, may justly be pronounced the very definition of tyranny.

The American people are wising up to this abuse of power, and I believe this President must respect the rule of law, despite his clear self-interest to act otherwise.

I believe it is only a matter of time before the President continues to abuse executive discretion to correct problems with his law. Instead of being forthcoming with the American people and Congress and explaining why parts of this law won't work, he relies on his administrative agencies to issue 11-hour blog posts or leaks to the media to announce delays in portions of his signature law.

Another way this administration is trying to fix problems is to put the burden of fixing problems on others. Last month the President tried to fix the problem of cancelled plans by kicking the can to State insurance regulators to determine whether, in 48 days from the date of his announcement in November, they can change their State insurance regulation policies quickly enough to permit plans to continue to offer those plans available in 2013 and 2014. He expected State insurance commissioners to bail him out to allow Americans to keep the plans they were promised they could keep. He is also expecting insurance companies to bail the administration out of problems as well.

The insurance industry will now extend the deadline until January 10 for Americans to pay for coverage that starts on New Year's Day. This doesn't fix the problem of coverage gaps, but it is a convenient talking point for the administration.

While 2013 was filled with one unbroken ObamaCare promise after another, the President's inability to follow through on making coverage more affordable for families and small businesses was one of the biggest. In a rare moment of candor, Secretary Sebelius was forced to admit:

[t]here are some individuals who may be looking at increases [in health care costs].

A recent Associated Press/GfK poll confirms that more than "some" individuals will be facing sticker shock thanks to ObamaCare: Sixty-nine percent say their premiums will be going up, while 59 percent say annual deductibles or copayments are increasing.

A separate poll by the Washington Post and ABC found that just 5 percent of Americans believe that ObamaCare will actually reduce their health care costs.

The reality for many Americans is that dramatically higher premiums, deductibles, and copayments mean they are going to have less money in their wallets to spend on rent, pay for college, or to invest in a small business.

As a result, 67 percent of respondents in a recent Fox News poll say ObamaCare should be delayed and 53 percent of respondents would vote to repeal the law.

This holiday season Democrats should give the American people what they were promised all along: lower costs, while keeping the doctor and plan they have and like.

As we begin 2014, this President and administration should commit to abandoning their power grabs and complete disregard for the rule of law. This law was passed, hurriedly rushed through here on a partisan vote. Not a single Republican Senator here voted for it. We are now seeing the effects of that: one-party rule, one party running roughshod over the other to try to get something enacted into law—which now, as the American people are finding out, they are the ones impacted.

We are seeing all the adverse, harmful impacts which come with it: higher premiums, cancelled coverage, lower take-home pay, higher deductibles, and a less promising future for the American people. We can and we should do better.

I hope that as Americans this Christmas season reflect on the past and think to the future, we will resolve to do what is necessary to give them a brighter future by putting in place policies which will grow the economy, create jobs, increase the take-home pay of middle-class Americans, rather than give them another gut punch which makes it that much harder for them to provide for themselves and their families.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise for two purposes. No. 1, to discuss the National Defense Authorization Act and the fact that we cannot offer amendments to it and the process that has deteriorated in the Senate for deliberation. Second, I will speak very shortly about the nomination of Mayorkas, one of the first nominees we will be voting on this week.

The Senate is poised to vote on a final National Defense Authorization Act after considering only two amendments. The Senate has not been functioning like it should for some time, and the way that the National Defense Authorization Act has been handled is one example. I have served in the majority and the minority, with Democratic Presidents and Republican Presidents. So I have seen it operate from every perspective. What is unique about the Senate is that the rules as well as the traditions force Senators to work together. That leads Senators to understand where the other side is coming from, resulting in mutual respect and scrutiny.

I hear from a lot of Iowans who are upset at the tone they hear in Washington and the lack of bipartisanship. I have often said that the Senate functions best when no party has more than about 55 seats. If you have much more than that, there is less of a tendency to want to work in a bipartisan fashion. That was true for most of my time in the Senate but not now. Despite a current margin of just 5 seats in the Senate, there has been very little bipartisan cooperation. I suppose some Democratic Senators really believe it when they say that this is all Republicans' fault. I think anyone who remembers how the Senate used to operate and has paid attention to how the current majority leadership has been running things in fact knows better.

In fairness, quite a few Members of the Senate do not remember how the Senate is supposed to operate because it has been dysfunctional ever since they were elected. Some Senators previously served in the House of Representatives, where the majority party controls everything that happens. In the House of Representatives, the Rules Committee sets out the terms of debate for each bill. If you want to offer an amendment in the House you have to go, hat in hand, to the Rules Committee and say: Mother, may I. If the House leadership does not like your amendment, frankly, you are out of luck.

If that sounds familiar, that is because it is how the current Senate leadership has been running things lately here in the Senate. We have seen an absolutely unprecedented use—or I should say abuse—of cloture motions paired with a tactic called filling the tree to block amendments from being considered.

That not only affects the minority party, but Democratic Senators are affected as well. I would say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle: How many times have you had an amendment you wanted to offer, that was important to your State, but you could not do it because amendments were blocked? The Senate majority leader has effectively become a one-man version of the House Rules Committee, dictating what amendments will be debated and which ones will never see the light of day. This strips the ability of individual Senators to effectively represent their States, regardless of party.

It also virtually guarantees that any legislation the Senate votes on will be more partisan in nature. I would ask my colleagues across the aisle: Isn't your first responsibility to the people of your State, not to party leadership? Are you really content to cede to your party leader the trust and responsibility placed in you by the voters of your State? How much longer can you go along with this proposition?

The people of Iowa sent me to the Senate to represent them, not simply vote up or down on a purely partisan agenda dictated by the majority leader. Everyone complains about the lack of bipartisanship these days, but there is no opportunity for individual Senators to work across the aisle when legislation is drafted on a partisan basis and amendments are blocked. Bipartisanship requires giving individual Senators a voice regardless of party. When Senators are only allowed to vote on items that are preapproved by the majority leader, those Senators lose the ability to effectively represent their State and, in the end, become mere tools of party leadership. It is no wonder Americans are so cynical about government right now.

In the last decade, when I was chairman of the Finance Committee and Republicans controlled the Senate, we wanted to actually get things done. In order for that to happen, we knew that we had to accommodate the minority. We had to have patience, humility, and respect for the minority—attributes that do not exist on the other side anymore. We had some major bipartisan accomplishments, from the largest tax cut in history to a Medicare prescription drug program to numerous trade agreements. Those kinds of major bills do not happen anymore.

The Senate rules provide that any Senator may offer an amendment regardless of party affiliation. Each Senator represents hundreds of thousands or millions of Americans, and each has an individual right to offer amendments for consideration. The principle here is not about political parties having their say but duly elected Senators participating in the legislative process, as imagined by the Constitution. Again, as part of our duty to represent the citizens of our respective States, each Senator has an individual right to offer amendments. This right cannot be outsourced to party leadership.

The longstanding tradition of the Senate is that Members of the minority party, as well as rank-and-file Members of the majority party have an opportunity to offer amendments for a vote in the Senate. That has historically been the case with the annual National Defense Authorization Act, the very bill that we are debating now. But not this year. It typically takes a couple of weeks to consider the National Defense Authorization Act. This year the majority party leadership chose to wait until a week before the scheduled Thanksgiving recess to bring it up, leaving little time for the customary open debate and amendment process.

Once the Defense bill was brought up, rather than promptly starting to process amendments, the majority leader immediately blocked amendments so that he could control what came up for a vote. Obviously, the Senate ground to a halt, wasting time that we did not have when we could have been considering amendments from both sides of the aisle.

This process, as everyone here in the Senate knows, is called filling the tree, where the majority leader offers blocker amendments that block any other Senator from offering their own amendment unless the majority leader agreed to set aside his blocker amendment so other amendments can be offered.

Filling the tree does not appear anywhere in the Senate rules. It is based upon combining two precedents, the precedent that the majority leader has the first right of recognition by the Presiding Officer and the precedent that only one first-degree and one second-degree amendment can be pending at any one time. Basically, the majority leader abuses his prerogative to cut in line and offer an amendment that does nothing more than simply change the enacting date by 1 day, for instance. That then blocks any other Senator from exercising his right to offer an amendment.

This so-called filling-the-tree tactic used to be relatively rare, but it has become routine under current leadership. This way the Democratic leadership can prevent other Senators from offering amendments that they do not want to have to vote on. Then, with amendments blocked, the majority leader makes a motion to bring debate to a close. Around here that is called cloture. When cloture is invoked, it sets up a limited time before a final vote must take place. By keeping amendments blocked while running out the clock, the majority leader can force a final vote on a bill without having to consider any amendments other than amendments that the majority leader might approve.

It should not be a surprise to anyone that Members of the minority party who wish to offer amendments will vote against a motion to end debate until their amendments have been considered. When Republicans vote against the Democratic leader's motion to end debate, we are accused of launching a filibuster. In other words, unless we give up our right to participate fully in the legislative process, the other side says that we are filibustering.

Does that really count as a filibuster? No. The nonpartisan Congressional Research Service answers this question, and has a very helpful report on cloture motions and filibusters that make this point very clear. The CRS report is entitled, "Cloture Attempts on Nominations: Data and Historical Development," by Richard S. Beth. It contained an entire section called "Cloture Motions Do Not Correspond With Filibusters." It starts out:

Although cloture affords the Senate a means for overcoming a filibuster, it is erroneous to assume that cases in which cloture was sought are always the same as those in which a filibuster occurs. Filibusters may occur without cloture being sought, and cloture may be sought when no filibuster is taking place. The reason is, cloture is sought by supporters of matters, whereas filibusters are conducted by its opponents.

It then goes on to explain various scenarios to illustrate this point. Several Members of the majority have made a point of trying to confuse cloture motions with filibusters. We hear constantly that there have been an unprecedented number of Republican filibusters. They often point to a chart that purports to tally the number of filibusters and say that this is evidence of abuse of the Senate rules by the minority. The number they quote is the number of cloture motions, not the number of filibusters. It is true that there have been a record number of cloture motions, and I also agree that the number amounts to an egregious abuse of Senate rules, but, again, there is a very significant difference: Cloture motions do not correspond with filibusters. Cloture motions are filed by the majority party leadership, not by the minority party. This abuse of cloture is a major cause of the Senate's current dysfunction.

Again, this abuse of cloture, often combined with the blocking of amendment also prevents all Senators from doing what they were sent here to do, not just Members of the minority party.

It has gotten even worse. Even where the majority leader has decided he is going to be open to amendments, he has created out of whole cloth new restrictions to limit Senators' rights. First, he normally only opens the amendment process if there is an agreement to limit amendments. This is usually only a handful or so. Then he has magically determined that only germane or relevant amendments can be considered.

Of course, nowhere do the Senate rules require this, other than postcloture. Senators elected in the last few years appear to be ignorant of that fact. You will hear some Senators here argue against an amendment saying it is nongermane or nonrelevant. They have totally fallen for the creative rulemaking of the majority leader, thus giving up one of their rights as a Senator with which to represent their State. I cannot count on how many nongermane or nonrelevant amendments I had to allow votes on when I processed bills when Republicans were in the majority. They were usually tough political votes, but we took them because we wanted to get things done. We wanted the Senate to function.

You do not see that nowadays. The current majority leader avoids tough votes at all costs and that is why we don't get much done around here. The American people sent us here to represent them. That means voting, not avoiding tough votes.

We sometimes hear this is a question of majority rule versus minority obstruction. Again, that ignores that each Senator is elected to represent their State, not simply to be an agent of the other party. While the majority of Senators may be from one party, they represent very different States, and the agenda of the majority leader will not always be consistent with the interest of their States.

When one individual, the Senate majority leader, controls what comes up for a vote, that is not majority rule. In fact, there are policies that have majority support in the Senate that have been denied a vote.

What happened during Senate debate on the budget resolution this year seems to prove that point. The special rules of the budget resolution limit debate so it can't be filibustered but allow for an unlimited number of amendments.

A Republican amendment to support repealing the tax on lifesaving medical devices in President Obama's health care law passed by an overwhelming 79-to-20 vote, with more than half of the Democrats voting with the Republicans rather than with their party leader.

A Republican amendment supported the approval of the Keystone XL Pipeline to bring oil from Canada and passed 62 to 37.

Those are two examples, because votes such as these that split the Democrats and hand a win to the Republicans are exactly what the majority leader has been trying to avoid by blocking amendments.

That is why the Senate didn't take up a budget resolution for more than 3 years. Still, the budget resolution isn't a law, so unless legislation on those issues is allowed to come up for a vote, nothing will happen despite the support of the vast majority of the Senate as demonstrated by those two rollcall votes I just mentioned.

As a case in point, now we are on the National Defense Authorization Act, and one of the amendments the majority leader blocked would have imposed sanctions on the Iranian regime. Everyone knew this amendment enjoyed broad bipartisan support and would have passed easily had a vote been allowed to take place. It had majority support. But the Senate was not allowed to work its will.

Why? The Iran sanctions amendment was blocked because the President opposed it and it would have been a tough vote that divided the majority party. Is that a valid reason for shutting down the traditional open amendment process for the Defense bill? I don't think so.

Until we put an end to the abuse of cloture and the blocking of amendments, the Senate cannot function properly and the American people will continue to lack representation that they are entitled to.

MAYORKAS NOMINATION

As I said, I have a few short remarks on the Mayorkas nomination. I spoke at great length on this yesterday and I won't speak at great length today, but I have concern with Mr. Mayorkas' nomination, so I have additional information today for my colleagues.

Today the Office of Inspector General for the Department of Homeland Security released an embargoed version of its audit of the EB-5 immigrant investor visa program. The report states that the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service has difficulty ensuring the integrity of the program and does not always ensure that regional centers meet all eligibility requirements.

Specifically, the report said:

U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service did not always enforce its own regulations and procedures to assist with managing the regional center program.

Another quote:

Until improvements are made, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service is unable to prevent fraud and national security threats . . .

Another quote:

[I]t cannot report the results of the program accurately or ensure the EB-5 program is benefiting the U.S. economy and creating jobs for U.S. citizens as created by Congress.

We understand Mr. Mayorkas is in charge of these programs. The IG said the agency needed to improve coordination and rely on the expertise of other agencies.

The IG had several recommendations for the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service that, frankly, should have been in place before now, if the Director was doing his job. In his comments on the draft report, Mr. Mayorkas claimed that he was already addressing the issues the inspector general raised. He said his agency had "dramatically enhanced collaboration with key government partners," meaning he was co-operating with the FBI.

He also wrote that when his agency has concerns with EB-5 cases, it doesn't decide the cases until it has "fully coordinated its approach with enforcement and intelligence partners."

I have seen examples of this so-called coordination that Mr. Mayorkas talks about. But, again, his words don't comport with the actual practice.

When Homeland Security's law enforcement database, TECS, has a hit on someone applying for a regional center, the Citizenship and Immigration Service sends an email to the law enforcement agency that put the record in. But the problem is that the Citizenship and Immigration Service isn't waiting for law enforcement to make an investigation. In fact, information has come to my attention that CIS employees are told to move forward if law enforcement doesn't respond within 5 days. That is just 5 days to find out what sensitive security or fraud information caused that person to be flagged. If law enforcement doesn't get back to the Citizenship and Immigration Service soon enough, then that agency goes ahead and the person's application is approved.

That is not coordination. That coordination is a sham. That should be simply unacceptable to any of us who are concerned about the national security of our country. It is not the sort of way to run a program with national security vulnerabilities. Everybody should wait until law enforcement responds. We need to know who is coming into this country and not, and particularly when they are involved in a program where you buy your way into the country by buying a visa because you are supposed to be investing in this country and creating jobs in this country. But for some people who may want to get into this country for ulterior motives, they may violate our national security; they don't care about creating jobs. But if it gets them inside the country, they get here. So we have to know whether they are a threat to our national security.

The only reason the Citizenship and Immigration Service even does check on regional centers at all is because of a push within that agency that Mr. Mayorkas and his management resisted. Now they are trying to take credit for it.

More important is what his agency has not done. They refused to kick out regional centers that invite national security problems. Mr. Mayorkas claims he doesn't have statutory authority, but the inspector general audit recommended that Mr. Mayorkas should make clear on his own that fraud and national security concerns are a reason for regional centers to be kicked out of the program.

The bottom line is Mr. Mayorkas has not taken the steps that were within his power to guard against security vulnerabilities in the EB-5 program. The inspector general's audit report concludes:

Currently, U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Service cannot administer and manage the EB-5 regional centers program effectively.

Mr. Mayorkas has had ample notice of these problems for years. He has failed to take adequate action.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mrs. HAGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

Mrs. HAGAN. Mr. President, at the end of this year, 1.3 million Americans will be cut off from their Federal unemployment benefits. At the hardest time of the year, 1.3 million people will lose the lifeline they have relied on to support their families while they struggle to find jobs in this challenging economic climate.

Unfortunately, for 170,000 North Carolinians, this has already been a reality. Earlier this year, the North Carolina General Assembly slashed unemployment benefits, making North Carolina the only State in the Nation to actually stop receiving Federal emergency unemployment insurance—the only State in the Nation. This irresponsible and cold-hearted action by the general assembly has been devastating to the thousands of individuals and families across my State who are already struggling to make ends meet.

Sydney Houston is one of 170,000 jobless North Carolinians who would have received Federal unemployment benefits were it not for this new State law. A month after the law was enacted and Sydney no longer had her benefits, she told a North Carolina TV station that she was ironing her clothes in preparation for a job interview when her electricity was cut off because she couldn't pay her bills. "It's been excruciating," she said, adding that she feared her landlord knocking on her door to evict her at any moment.

People have to understand that these extended Federal unemployment insurance benefits help these families pay for their rent, pay for their food, and pay for their electricity, just as in Sydney's case.

I also received a letter from Sherrie Harmon, another North Carolina woman. Let me tell my colleagues what she said. Her letter stated:

I have lived in North Carolina my entire life and I've felt proud of my State. This has changed drastically.

Sherrie was laid off from her job at a law firm and her husband Rick lost his job a month later. Sherrie was drawing unemployment while searching for work and attending classes at Central Piedmont Community College in Charlotte. She was in her third semester of school when she found out that her unemployment would end.

She said:

We are at risk of losing everything we've worked for in the 24 years we've been married. I am completely lost.

We have heard so many stories such as these from Sydneys and Sherries across North Carolina.

What is more, North Carolina tax dollars are going to unemployed workers in every other State across the Nation except for North Carolina. Our citizens are paying their Federal taxpayer dollars for Federal unemployment benefits to 49 other States, even though our citizens cannot rely on the same safety net. This is not only unfair, it is hurting my State, which continues to have one of the highest unemployment rates in the country at 8 percent, with some of the rural counties in North Carolina as high as 14.5 percent.

As the Senate considers an extension of the emergency insurance program, I believe it is crucial to right the wrong that has been done to North Carolinians through no fault of their own. For this reason, I come to the floor today to express my thanks to my colleagues, especially Majority Leader REID, Senator MAX BAUCUS, and Senator JACK REED, for working with me to ensure that North Carolina's needs will be addressed as we work to extend unemployment insurance benefits into 2014.

I also urge my colleagues not to leave their constituents to the same fate as the citizens of my State, and to swiftly pass the Emergency Unemployment Compensation Extension Act. This bipartisan legislation, introduced by Senators JACK REED and DEAN HELLER, would extend Federal unemployment insurance benefits, and it would restore North Carolina's eligibility to participate in the program.

We must continue to work on bipartisan policies that will boost job creation and get Americans back into our workforce. We need educational institutions, local employers, and job training centers to join forces to ensure that unemployed workers are being trained for the job opportunities that are available right now.

I have a bill called the America Works Act that would do just that. It would close the skills gap that has been plaguing our country and it would take the guessing game out of hiring. The America Works Act would ensure that community colleges and job training programs develop curricula that will lead to portable, industry-recognized credentials that will help train our unemployed workers so they would be outstanding applicants for jobs that are available in their local communities right now.

In the meantime, as the unemployed struggle to get by while they look for jobs, we should not cut them off from the safety net that has served as their last lifeline for taking care of their families and putting food on the table. We should make certain that the unemployed in North Carolina have that same opportunity once again in spite of the action taken by the North Carolina General Assembly.

I am glad to be joining my colleagues in pushing to extend the unemployment insurance for both North Carolinians and people across our country. There is no reason to wait any longer to pass this critical legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. GILLIBRAND). The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SANDERS. Madam President, I take this opportunity to thank Senators LEVIN and INHOFE and the Committee on Armed Services for their very hard work on the Department of Defense authorization bill. Unfortunately, I must vote against it, and I want to take this opportunity to explain why I am voting no and to express my very serious concerns about our Nation's bloated military budget, particularly in light of the many unmet needs we face as a nation.

At a time when the United States has a $17.2 trillion national debt and when we spend almost as much on defense as the rest of the world combined, the time is long overdue for us to take a hard look at the waste, at the cost overruns, and at the financial mismanagement that have plagued the Department of Defense for decades.

As a point of comparison, the International Institute for Strategic Studies estimates total global military spending in 2012 at $1.583 trillion. The U.S. portion of that spending is over 40 percent—$645 billion. In other words, the United States is spending almost as much as the rest of the world combined on defense. We are spending about $645 billion. China spends $102 billion. The United Kingdom spends $64 billion. Russia spends $59 billion. Other countries spend less.

According to the Washington Post:

Since 2001, the base defense budget has soared from $287 billion to $530 billion—and that's before accounting for the primary costs of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars.

In addition to the trillions spent on the war in Iraq and what seems to be a never-ending war in Afghanistan, the Department of Defense consistently engages in wasteful, inefficient, and often fraudulent spending.

At my request several years ago the Department of Defense issued a report detailing the breadth of fraud that exists within the Pentagon—the simple issue of massive fraud. The report showed that the Pentagon paid over $573 billion during the past 10 years to more than 300 contractors involved in civil fraud cases that resulted in judgments of more than $1 million—$398 billion of which was awarded after settlement or judgment for fraud. When awards to parent companies are counted, the Pentagon paid more than $1.1 trillion during the past 10 years just to the 37 top companies engaged in fraud. The bottom line is that almost every major defense contractor in this country has in one way or another been involved in fraudulent dealings with the taxpayers of this country and the Department of Defense.

Further, above and beyond fraud, the waste at the Pentagon is rampant, and we can go on for many hours just documenting the waste, but let me give just a few—a few—of the kinds of waste that the Pentagon regularly engages in. These are just a very few examples.

In July 2013 the Pentagon decided to build a 64,000-square-foot command headquarters for the U.S. military in Afghanistan that will not be utilized or even occupied. Even though the $34 million project was deemed unwanted by military commanders 3 years ago, the military still moved ahead with construction. That is one example.

Another example. According to a report released by the Department of Defense inspector general this year, the Pentagon has been paying contractor Boeing more than $3,357 for a piece of hardware they could have purchased from their own hardware store, the Defense Logistics Agency, for $15.42. It seems to me it would be a pretty good deal to get a product for $15 that you are paying over $3,000 for, but that is the way the Pentagon runs.

Furthermore, another issue, the July 2013 Special Inspector General for Afghanistan Reconstruction report includes the purchase of over $771 million worth of aircraft that the Afghans will be unable to operate and maintain. The Afghan Special Mission Wing has only one-quarter of the personnel needed to maintain and operate the fleet, and there are no existing DOD plans to reach full strength. The Pentagon is moving forward with purchases. Most of that money—$553 million—has been awarded to a Russian company that also sells weapons to Syria.

These are just a few examples. Needless to say, there are many more.

A recent article in Mother Jones has some interesting numbers about our military spending. According to the article, 70 percent of the value of the Federal Government's $1.8 trillion in property, land, and equipment belongs to the Pentagon. The American people will no doubt be interested in understanding that the Pentagon operates more than 170 golf courses worldwide.

At a time when we now spend almost as much as the rest of the world combined on defense, we can make judicious cuts in our Armed Forces without compromising our military capability. I think everybody in the Congress believes and understands that we need a strong defense—no debate about that—but we do not need a defense budget that is bloated, that is wasteful, and that has in it many areas of fraud.

In this respect, I hope my Republican colleagues and, in fact, all of my colleagues remember what former President Dwight Eisenhower, a good Republican, said on April 16, 1953, just as he was leaving office. What he said then was profound, and it is as true today as when he said it 60 years ago. This is what he said:

Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket signifies, in the final sense, a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and are not clothed. This world in arms is not spending money alone. It is spending the sweat of its laborers, the genius of its scientists, the hopes of its children. . . . This is not a way of life at all, in any true sense. Under the cloud of threatening war, it is humanity hanging from a cross of iron.

I would ask all of my colleagues to remember what Eisenhower said and understand that today, when we have this bloated and huge military budget, there are people who are talking about massive cuts in food stamps, massive cuts in education, massive cuts in affordable housing, cuts in Social Security, cuts in Medicare, cuts in Medicaid. I would argue very strongly that before we cut from the elderly and the children and the sick and the poor, maybe we take a hard look at this bloated military budget.

That is my view, but let me mention what the Cato Institute has to say—not BERNIE SANDERS but the Cato Institute, one of the most conservative organizations in this country. Here is what the Cato Institute said on May 3, 2013. By the way, as I think most people know, my views are as far apart as possible from the Cato Institute on most issues. This is what the Cato Institute said. Some of my conservative Republican friends might want to pay attention to this quote:

U.S. military spending is far too excessive for legitimate defense needs. . . . After sequestration we will still spend more [on defense], against much less severe threats, than at the peak of the Cold War. . . . The U.S. now accounts for 44 percent of all global military spending. Put another way, the U.S. spends nearly as much on the military as the rest of the world combined. . . . Twenty percent of the U.S. federal budget is devoted to military spending, while the average—for our NATO allies is a mere 3.6 percent. Five percent of U.S. annual GDP is allocated to the military, but for the NATO countries, Japan and China, it is well below 2 percent. . . . Today the amount Washington spends on the military each year is $2,300 a person in the U.S. The comparable obligation for the average NATO country is $503 a person. For China it is less than $200 a person.

That is not BERNIE SANDERS; that is the Cato Institute.

The situation is so absurd that the Pentagon is unable to even account for how it spends its money. Earlier this year the Government Accountability Office cited its inability—that is, the GAO's ability—to audit the Pentagon. They wrote that they were unable to do a comprehensive financial analysis due to "serious financial management problems at the Department of Defense that made its financial statements unauditable." That is from the Government Accountability Office. So we are voting for a budget that the GAO says they cannot even audit—for the most expensive agency in government.

Let me now quote from an article that appeared in the Washington Post on August 29, 2013. The defense budget—a purposefully opaque document—includes what is known as the black budget. The information I am providing here comes from the Washington Post—$52.6 billion that funds the CIA, NSA, and other secret intelligence agencies. The CIA, NSA, and National Reconnaissance Office receive more than 68 percent of the black budget, with the NSA receiving $10.8 billion annually. At a time when the NSA has been engaging in what I consider to be unconstitutional activities—the widespread collection of American citizens' data—I think we can find the ability to make some cuts in what they are doing.

I support a strong defense for our country and a robust National Guard and Reserve that can meet our domestic and foreign challenges. The National Guard provides a well-trained, disciplined, and operationally ready force for a fraction of the cost that Active-Duty soldiers require. The Reserve Forces do not require nearly the same level of overhead in terms of full-time employment and infrastructure costs. So as we move forward trying to develop how we have a cost-effective defense, I think we should put a great deal of emphasis on our National Guard and on the Reserve.

Let me conclude by saying in America today our middle class is struggling. We have more people living in poverty than at any time in the history of our country. Real unemployment is over 13 percent; youth unemployment, 20 percent; African-American youth unemployment, close to 40 percent.

We have an infrastructure which is crumbling. We have large numbers of young people graduating from college deeply in debt. We have others who cannot even afford to go to college because of the high cost of college. In other words, this country faces monumental problems. On top of that, we have a $17.2 trillion national debt.

It would seem to me that it is important we get our priorities straight. One of the priorities we should be getting straight is that we cannot give the Department of Defense all they want. It is time to take a very hard look at that budget in a way we have not done up to this point.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Massachusetts be recognized for 5 minutes and that I follow with my comments until I complete them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. I thank the Senator from Oklahoma.

This final couple of days that we are going to be in session are very important because they are the days preceding the expiration of the wind energy tax break. It expires on December 31. There are energy efficiency tax breaks that expire on December 31.

This is unfortunate, because these are industries that are rapidly growing. But let's take note here. If you are the oil industry or other older fossil fuel industries, your tax breaks are not expiring on December 31. For the wind industry, for the renewable energy industry, we have to come back out here every year and try to get those tax breaks renewed. Each year as we reach this December 31 date, we talk about a Congress adjourning without completing it, sending total corporate unpredictability out into the marketplace, knowing that we need to have a robust, competitive marketplace.

Honestly, Adam Smith is spinning in his grave as he watches a Senate adjourn without continuing the tax breaks for wind, as the tax breaks for all of its competitive industries continue on year after year. They are permanent tax breaks. Actually, Adam Smith is spinning in his grave so rapidly that he would qualify for a permanent tax break, because he would be generating so much energy, wondering how can you have such inconsistency? How can you have one source of energy have to come in almost like a mendicant each year begging, and then having the year expire, after having added 13,000 megawatts of new electricity to the grid last year, knowing that the entire nuclear industry only added 100,000 in 60 years?

Here we are again. Those tax breaks are going to expire. We are going to leave here. We could not get unanimous consent in order to take them up here today to extend those tax breaks. Once again, the energy sources of the future, the innovative new energy sources, pay the price. They are not allowed to be given permanent status or, as we leave here, any status at all as of the end of this year.

Young people in our country, the green energy generation, looked and they asked: Well, why can't we have our era's energy technologies given permanent tax breaks or at least year to year before you go home? Why can't you have that kind of a debate out there? Why is there a debate at all, to be honest with you, given the fact that there is $7 billion a year that is going to be given to the oil industry, a permanent tax break?

We are not looking for that for wind. We are looking at much smaller amounts of tax benefits. So from my perspective, I look at the warming planet, I look at the Chinese and others who are targeting wind sources. I was in China in 2009. We rode by a wind factory with wind turbines, hundreds of them. They were all, in a lot of ways, pointing right at the American economy, in the same way that those Cuban missiles were pointing at our country in 1962—pointing right at us, a threat to us. But in the 21st century, it is a threat to our economy because we are not investing in these new technologies in the way we continue to invest in the old.

The least it could be and should be is a level playing field. Let's see who wins. Let's let capitalism work. Let's have this true Darwinian paranoia-inducing capitalism that allows for winners to be selected based upon the same kind of tax breaks for everyone.

If that is the case, I think everyone would be happy. But that is not the way it is going to be this year. That is not the way it is most years.

Permanent tax breaks for the older technologies, and the kind of halting, questioning, capitalism-killing, corporate-questioning tax breaks for the nascent but growing and vibrant new technologies that the Chinese and the Germans and the Danes and others see as their job-creating sectors in their economy.

I thank the Senator from Oklahoma for this opportunity.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

MAYORKAS NOMINATION

Mr. COBURN. Madam President, to comment on my colleague from Massachusetts, he is correct that the tax credits for wind energy are expiring, but he is incorrect in his ascertainment that all tax credits are the same. The tax credits in the oil and gas industry are deferred tax payments, and the $7 billion they collect this year, in terms of deferred payments, in terms of intangible drilling costs, will, in fact, be made up for with $7 billion of payments from 10 years ago. So the net is zero, whereas the wind industry has a tax credit which the American consumer subsidizes to the tune of a significant amount, the value of the electricity that we get there. So it is viable—if we were to put the wind energy tax credit the same as we have in the oil and gas industry, I would happily support it, where it was a delayed capture of later revenues flowing back to the Treasury. But that is not what we want. We want to give a refundable tax credit directly to wind energy. It is not the same. The apples are not the same.

I came to the floor this evening regrettably having to come and make this statement I am making. In the last month we have seen a lot of things happen in the Senate, which have led to other things happening in the Senate. I do not think anybody is happy about it. But today, the leader is taking the unprecedented step—I say that underlining the word unprecedented—of having the Senate vote on a nominee who is currently under active investigation.

I have no premonitions or knowledge about the specific facts of that investigation. But what I do know, in checking with the Senate historian, the Senate library, and from the history of the Senate, is that it has never been done before. It has never been done. So my reason in coming to the floor is, No. 1, to defend my position and what should be the position of the Senate, and to make the case to my colleagues that we are doing a disservice both to this nominee and to the position he will fill.

By all letters of recommendation, Alejandro Mayorkas is an honorable man. President Obama is nominating him to be Deputy Secretary at the Department of Homeland Security. Under the new Senate rules, the minority has essentially no right to stop the majority from forcing through a nominee who possibly, just possibly, may be unfit for office on the basis of this investigation. Nobody is saying he is. They are not saying no. They are saying wait. This is, in fact, the very act the Republicans were afraid of when Leader REID facilitated the change in the Senate rules by breaking the Senate rules.

The Senate is going to cast this vote without knowledge, full knowledge, of advice and consent on his fitness for his position. We can do nothing to stop that. We realize that.

The precedent we are talking about is historic. Holding this vote in light of an active investigation into serious relevant allegations of misconduct by any nominee appears to be virtually without any precedent in this body. We searched extensively for any precedent, for the decision to hold a vote on this nomination.

The Congressional Research Service studied this. It has never happened before. Never. In fact, they discovered the opposite. The Senate has established a history and followed a practice that should lead us to postpone consideration of any nominee under investigation. Here are some examples they found.

In January of 2005, President George Bush nominated Ken Tomlinson to be Chairman of the Broadcasting Board of Governors. An active inspector general's investigation into allegations of unethical behavior by Mr. Tomlinson led the Senate panel to delay action on the nomination for over 18 months. He was never confirmed.

Later that same year, President Bush nominated Roland Arnall to the post of U.S. Ambassador to The Netherlands. At the time Mr. Arnall's firm was being investigated by regulators in 30 States for predatory lending. Then-Foreign Relations Committee chairman Republican Senator Richard Lugar consented to a request by Democrats that October to delay voting on the nominee because of the investigations. Senator JOSEPH BIDEN spoke out in favor of the delay, as did Senator Paul Sarbanes, who cited longstanding precedent for delaying a vote until the nominee was "clear." Mr. Arnall was eventually voted out of committee, after Republicans concluded the investigation did not target the nominee personally, but he was not confirmed by the full Senate until the following February, 7 months after he was nominated, when his company agreed to end the investigations by settling the cases against him.

My friend President Obama, who nominated Mr. Mayorkas, was a member of the Foreign Relations Committee at that time. Then he seemed to agree that nominees facing investigations should not receive a vote. A 2006 LA Times story on Mr. Arnall's confirmation quoted then-Senator Obama's spokesman as saying: Because a settlement has been reached, Senator Obama will not seek to block his nomination.

A vote on another Bush nominee, Lester Crawford, was delayed for 2 months in 2005 while the inspector general of the Food and Drug Administration probed claims, allegations, that Mr. Crawford had an affair with a co-worker and gave her preferential treatment. Once again, the OIG's review was complete. The OIG concluded that the allegations could not be substantiated, and the HELP Committee voted to confirm him.

In 2004, the Senate Banking Committee did not schedule a vote on Alphonso Jackson to serve as Chairman of the Department of Housing and Urban Development until the HUD inspector general determined Mr. Jackson had not violated the Department's workplace violence policies as subordinates had alleged.

All of this advises us strongly to delay a vote on Mr. Mayorkas until the OIG investigation into his alleged actions is concluded. I would suggest that we should learn from history and not move forward with this nomination. If it was true for the Senate then, and if it was true for Senator BIDEN, if it was true for Senator Obama, if it was true for their colleagues and many Senators who maintain this precedent until today, it should be true for us now.

Last week, when Mr. Mayorkas was considered by the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, my chairman justified moving forward with the nomination by asserting that the DHS OIG had not identified any criminal wrongdoing by Mr. Mayorkas. At present, the DHS OIG is only considering allegations of conflicts of interest, misuse of position, mismanagement, and appearance of impropriety. In none of those situations I identified were the nominees under criminal investigation. Yet the Senate delayed its vote until each investigation was finished. Since the DHS OIG has not completed its investigation, we do not know if there will ultimately be any criminal findings. I doubt that there will.

We do know, based on the precedent that I cited, an investigation into any potential wrongdoing, whether criminal or not, is enough for the Senate to delay a vote on an important nominee, or at least it used to be.

Of course, the Senate recently changed. The majority leader exercised the so-called nuclear option, changing the rules by breaking the rules, granting my colleagues the new power to push administration nominees through the confirmation process with a simple majority.

The leader is attempting to use this new power to push through scores of nominees in the last few days this session. But scrutiny and judgment should not be diminished in a partisan rush to get one's way. Forget the rest of the nominees; this is one where an open investigation is currently underway. With this nominee before us, Mr. Mayorkas might do well to wait for all the facts.

As we all know, the DHS OIG is also currently under investigation. This office is reviewing the leader who recently resigned. They are reviewing allegations of conflict of interest, misuse of position, mismanagement of EB-5 investor visa program, and an appearance of impropriety. They are all serious concerns. I hope they aren't true, but right now we don't have all of the facts.

While I understand OIG is not currently aware of any criminal activity, since the investigation is still open and several interviews remain, that could possibly change.

As I understand, however, the OIG plans to complete its investigation and release its findings in a few short months. Until then, we won't know what is only an allegation and what will be proven by evidence and facts.

Most concerning to me is the fact that the White House failed to alert me or the committee chairman to the fact that Mr. Mayorkas was under investigation, which they had an obligation to do. In fact, the letter from White House counsel conveniently doesn't confirm or deny whether the President was aware Mr. Mayorkas was even under investigation. It is unclear to me why Chairman CARPER wasn't troubled by the White House being less than honest with him about a nominee he was expected to fast track for nomination.

I have spoken to a number of whistleblowers within DHS who have concerns about Mr. Mayorkas' fitness for position. These whistleblowers have made serious allegations about how Mr. Mayorkas has overseen and influenced the EB-5 program. They are only allegations, but they do raise questions. They raise questions about his allegiance to DHS's core mission to prevent terrorism and enhance security.

A number of the allegations extend well beyond the EB-5 program and raise concerns about the fitness for the No. 2 position in DHS. They include the following: attempts by Mr. Mayorkas to obstruct the investigations by Congress; allegations of preventing program integrity measures requested by the Federal Bureau of Investigation; intimidation of employees who questioned agency policies; susceptibility to political influence; failing to properly enforce program integrity mechanisms, resulting in potential threats to national security.

Whistleblowers who spoke to the Wall Street Journal said that Mr.

Mayorkas fast-tracked approvals of certain EB-5 applications over objections regarding the suspicious source of funds to rebuild the casino in Las Vegas which, in fact, was noted in a recent article by the Washington Times.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article by the Wall Street Journal.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

[From the Washington Times, Dec. 10, 2013]
VEGAS RULES: HARRY REID PUSHED FEDS TO CHANGE RULING FOR CASINO'S BIG-MONEY FOREIGNERS

(By John Solomon and David Sherfinski)

The Obama administration overruled career Homeland Security officials and expedited visa applications for about two dozen foreign investors for a politically connected Las Vegas casino hotel after repeated pressure from Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid and his staff, according to internal government documents obtained by The Washington Times.

The move to overturn what is normally a non-appealable visa decision came despite concerns about "suspicious financial activity" involving some of the visa applicants from Asia, and it ultimately benefited several companies whose executives have donated heavily in recent years to Democrats, the documents show. It also ensnared Mr. Obama's current nominee to be the No. 2 Homeland Security official, Alejandro "Ali" Mayorkas, whose appointment is to be reviewed by the Senate on Wednesday.

The intervention from Mr. Reid's staff was so intense at one point a year ago that a U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS) official reported that it prompted a phone shouting match, turning a normally bureaucratic review process inside the Homeland Security Department into a politically charged drama that worried career officials.

"This one is going to be a major headache for us all because Sen. Reid's office/staff is pushing hard and I just had a long yelling match on the phone," USCIS Legislative Affairs official Miguel "Mike" Rodriguez warned in a Dec. 5, 2012, email to Homeland Security Department officials.

The emails, obtained by The Times from government officials concerned that the EB-5 investor visa program has become too politicized, detail how the SLS Hotel, formerly known as the Sahara Casino, tried to jump to the head of the line for its request for about two dozen visas for Asian investors willing to help it fund a major renovation of the storied property on the Las Vegas Strip.

Despite early pressure from Mr. Reid's staff, career officials inside the Department of Homeland Security initially turned down the SLS Hotel on the grounds that it failed to meet the criteria for expedited review. The decision dated Dec. 17, 2012, stated flatly that "there is no appeal or reconsideration of this decision."

But that simply prompted Mr. Reid to personally reach out to the top official at USCIS, Alejandro "Ali" Mayorkas, setting into motion a process that consumed top political officials inside the Homeland Security and Commerce departments and ultimately resulted in a ruling that granted expedited status to the hotel over the objections of career officials.

"Ali had a call with Sen. Reid on these 1-526 cases on Tuesday of this week," Mr.-

Rodriguez wrote top officials on Jan. 11. "While no guarantees were made on the call, Ali did promise the Senator that USCIS would take a 'fresh look' at the expedited request."

Government officials did a lot more than give a fresh look—forwarding from Mr. Reid's office the names of people involved with the hotel project that could help the federal agency change its mind on the expedited status request. Mr. Reid's staff repeatedly made the case that the hotel would lose its potential funding for its renovation if Homeland Security's USCIS didn't expedite the visas.

"As you can imagine this project is pretty important to Southern Nevada. It will probably be the only 'new' property opening up on the Strip for some time, and if their $300 million senior lending facility from JP Morgan Chase expires because these visas aren't processed expeditiously, it will be a huge setback for the project and the 8,600 jobs associated with it," Michael Vannozzi, then a top aide to Mr. Reid, wrote Homeland Security officials at one point.

The hotel needed the foreign investors' visas to be approved so that their money could be brought into the country and paired with the JP Morgan financing to underwrite the renovation of the hotel, the documents stated.

Within a few short weeks of Mr. Reid's personal intervention, the decision not to expedite the visas was reversed, allowing the hotel to secure major funding from JP Morgan Chase.

"Applications approved for expedited processing move to the front of the processing queue but otherwise go through the same robust eligibility and security review utilized for all EB-5 decisions," the spokesman said.

A spokeswoman for Mr. Reid said the senator "has supported and will support the SLS Las Vegas in any way he can."

"Sen. Reid believes it is his job to do all he can to promote economic growth and development in the state, and he makes no apologies for helping to bring jobs to Nevada," spokeswoman Kristen Orthman said.

Hotel officials did not respond to a request for comment.

The emergence of the documents comes at a sensitive time for the Obama administration and Mr. Mayorkas, whose nomination to be deputy secretary of DHS is being considered Wednesday by a Senate committee.

Mr. Mayorkas and his agency are already under investigation for visa application decisions made involving an electric car company associated with Terry McAuliffe, a longtime Democratic fundraiser and now the governor-elect of Virginia.

Officials say the EB-5 program, created by Congress in 1990, is designed to attract investors willing to risk capital in ventures that will create jobs in the United States. Would-be entrepreneurs who invest at least $500,000 in a new U.S. business can apply.

The citizenship services agency says the goal of the program is to "stimulate the U.S. economy through job creation and capital investment by foreign investors."

Almost all foreign investments in the EB-5 program are channeled through special companies called "regional centers." Once their business plan is approved by immigration officials, the companies bundle investments into qualifying new businesses. Investors then can apply for an EB-5 visa, and, if approved, can claim a conditional green card immediately upon entry to the United States. After two years, the conditions are removed if the investment has created the jobs or looks likely to.

The emails referencing Mr. Reid's intervention could increase concerns that the worker visa program has been exploited by political pressures.

"It's not one party's monopoly, but it's kind of inherently worrisome," said David North, a policy analyst at the Center for Immigration Studies, a group that advocates for less immigration into the U.S. "There certainly are political pressures to cut short the review process."

Executives for the two main companies involved in the hotel project have donated more than $127,000 to political causes over the last three elections, mostly to Democrats, Federal Election Commission records show.

Sen. Dean Heller, Nevada Republican, wrote a letter on the matter to USCIS California Service Center on December 19, 2012.

"I strongly encourage you to consider this request and the impact the project will have on Nevada's economy," he wrote, under the assumption that the petitions were still being processed. "Time is of the essence and advancing Nevada's economy would be strongly supported by this project."

Mr. Heller's office said there were no subsequent conversations with USCIS or DHS.

According to the plan, the project is estimated to create 8,600 jobs.

Peter Joseph, executive director of the Association to Invest in the USA (IIUSA), a membership organization representing 107 federally designated EB-5 Regional Centers across the country, pointed out that USCIS is dealing with a backlog of about 7,000 applications—proof that they're employing careful scrutiny.

"Based on the backlog, they clearly take it seriously, and rightfully so," he said. "I think that the data tells the story—that this is a program that is being administered carefully with the appropriate in-house expertise."

DHS declined to say which specific cases had been expedited. It is not clear whether the applications flagged for security reasons were ultimately approved, but USCIS said in a statement that the agency "takes seriously our responsibility to safeguard national security and public safety while deciding requests for immigration benefits."

"USCIS subjects all benefit requests to a background check process which includes coordinating with law enforcement agencies where applicable," the statement reads. "USCIS does not proceed to a final decision regarding any benefit requests until concerns identified during the background check process are sufficiently resolved."

The Las Vegas Review-Journal reported in February that SBE Entertainment was indeed able to secure the last piece of the $415 million in financing that they were seeking.

SBE Chief Executive Officer Sam Nazarian said the money raised through the EB-5 funding was "far above" what had been expected and would allow SBE to pay down its senior note on the property, the paper reported. The terms of the project required $115 million in EB-5 capital.

The project was apparently struggling to secure that last bit of funding. Adam Horowitz of Lever Capital Partners wrote to the managing director of Stockbridge Real Estate Funds, which was working on the project, on January 24 saying they had reached out to more than 70 national and international investors/lenders, and all but one said their lack of knowledge of the EB-5 program would prevent them from providing capital for the project.

"Brevet Capital, a New York City based private equity fund, was the one lender that showed interest since they had been spending time working on such projects," Mr. Horowitz wrote. "Their one hurdle was that there needed to be at least one (1) I-526 petition approval. Since that approval has not been granted they have currently withdrawn from discussions."

Mr. COBURN. I understand that some of my colleagues on the other side are frustrated that whistleblowers have not come forward to speak to them. To be clear, I have communicated this request to the whistleblowers and have invited those whistleblowers who have spoken to come to my office to speak to the majority, twice. But they have told me that they have the fear they will face retribution if their identities become known and that they will lose their jobs. Putting myself in their shoes, I can't blame them. I cannot provide them with protection.

They have also heard Members of this Senate dismiss their serious allegations. For example, the Senator from Delaware referred to the whistleblower allegations as rumor and innuendo. If you were an official who had come forward with serious concerns about improper behavior, potentially putting your livelihood at risk, would you feel comfortable speaking with somebody who has already dismissed your allegations as rumor and innuendo?

So we will leave it to the inspector general's office to consider whistleblower allegations and all of the evidence to determine whether any inappropriate or criminal activity took place. Again, we will know that judgment in a short 2 months.

However, we do have other information that raises serious concerns about this nomination. The committee's business meeting last week to consider Mr. Mayorkas is a perfect example of why the Senate should wait for the OIG's investigation to be completed. At that meeting the chairman gave a lengthy opening statement that made a number of concerning and inaccurate statements which served to denigrate the 650 employees at the Office of Inspector General at Homeland Security.

The office deserves some criticism, that is for sure, as our Subcommittee on Financial and Contracting Oversight has determined. Rather than rely on their insights, he came up with some of his own. There are actual misstatements of fact, and they only serve to further obscure a complicated and difficult situation.

For example, the chairman claimed that 3 days before the confirmation hearing on July 25, information about the OIG investigation was leaked to Congress and the media in a highly irregular manner.

As he knows, and his own committee record should indicate, the existence of the investigation was not leaked to Congress in a highly irregular manner, it was emailed to his staff, as well as mine, as an official communication by the DHS OIG congressional liaison office. If there was anything irregular about the situation, it was that the White House had not already confirmed there was an investigation ongoing. We had a right to that information, and it had been improperly kept from us.

In the face of the White House's inappropriate omission, the OIG chose to inform us. I am sure it was a hard choice, but I believe it was the right one. If they had not done so, we would not have known of the investigation of the sort which the Senate, in normal times, would have given great weight to and not moved forward on.

As DHS often tells us: If you see something, say something.

The chairman also repeatedly faulted the OIG for refraining from interviewing Mr. Mayorkas until the end of its investigation. This appears to be a criticism borne from a lack of experience and knowledge of the investigative process.

Quoting:

To my amazement, Director Mayorkas has never been contacted about this EB-5 investigation.

Later he said:

I cannot understand why they [OIG] have not talked to Mr. Mayorkas.

It is common practice to investigate the central figure in an investigation closer to the end of an investigation after evidence has been reviewed and collected. There are many reasons for this practice. One is that you do not know what to ask the subject until you have gathered all the information you can about his or her alleged misconduct. Another is that it minimizes the impact of the investigation on the subject, which can be an understandable concern when investigating a busy top official such as our present nominee. Early meetings can result in having to hold several interviews with the same official, asking questions about topics or allegations which could eventually be dismissed without their testimony by not identifying exculpatory evidence beforehand.

While the scheduling for this interview was upsetting to the chairman, it should not be to Mr. Mayorkas. He is a seasoned prosecutor and familiar with the process of the investigations, and he knows what to expect.

The chairman also claimed at the committee vote that the OIG has repeatedly given him deadlines and had missed them. The chairman inferred that we could not trust their word on when this investigation could be completed.

Specifically he said: "I was . . . informed that the investigation was likely to conclude in October."

Later he claimed: "We have no guarantee this investigation will simply not drag on and on . . . it has already slipped several times."

Later he added:

Each time we get an estimated timeline for completion, the date slips. First we were told October, then perhaps December. And as of last week, the IG said there were at least several months of work remaining.

None of this is true. According to my office records of the conversations with the inspector general, we have no record or recollection that the inspector general ever promised a date certain of completion in October. Neither do we have any record indicating the IG suggested December. Unless the IG communicated to the chairman these deadlines in the private conversations which he arranged without my knowledge or involvement, these statements appear to be simply false.

I would also say I cannot imagine the chairman or staff would engage in a private conversation with the inspector general regarding a sensitive investigation into a political official. Such conversation would be a breach not only of our practices but could raise ethical concerns of exerting undue influence upon an official proceeding.

I urge him to correct the RECORD or show us in detail the conversations where the IG made these points and promises.

The chairman also stated this fact, and news outlets erroneously reported this inaccurate claim, that the investigation was being handled by only one investigator and two assistants.

His quote was: "We learned that there is one investigator assigned," he claimed, "one investigator and two research assistants."

This is not true. The OIG has told our staff the case has a lead investigator—and that is true, an absolute common practice for investigations and most investigative and sensitive endeavors—but they were further told that the OIG had a rotating team of investigators, experts, research assistants, and staff help on various aspects of the investigation. This is a common practice, assigning leads to individual investigations but sharing a larger pool of assistant investigative resources. It is followed, to a great extent, by our own Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. I don't understand why the chairman's characterization would stray so far from the facts established in conversations involving both our staffs or from common sense.

I am also disappointed that it characterized the investigation as having a "lack of progress," which was "unacceptable" and "unfair, not just to Mr. Mayorkas but to a Department full of people who need leadership, and to a nation that is counting on the Department to help protect them."

The truth is it is not uncommon for investigations of senior officials to last a year or longer and is not a matter which should be rushed by anyone, certainly not the chairman of the authorizing committee.

This is the kind of rhetoric which causes concern in some quarters that the chairman and others are applying inappropriate pressure on an agency's internal processes and deliberation. Political pressure is simply not helpful to anyone. In fact, it can actually hinder the investigation and weaken public acceptance for the findings, particularly if they exonerate Mr. Mayorkas. People may allege, as they have already, that the Office of Inspector General waters down and weakens its finding in response to political pressures such as this.

If the OIG investigation results in a clean bill of health for Mr. Mayorkas, how many Americans, how many DHS employees, will wonder if the chairman's repeated disparaging remarks were indicative of a political pressure applied which improperly swayed the results? No one is served by his comments. What is more, they are not a reflection of the shared concern he voiced with me in our joint correspondence to the inspector general. I simply do not understand why he would intervene in such a vocal, public way, which could cast doubt and suspicion on the results of the investigation.

The other thing about this vote is it is unfair to Mr. Mayorkas. I have talked a lot about process and the need to know the findings of the DHS OIG report before we vote on Mr. Mayorkas. But no one seems to understand just how unfair this vote is to the nominee. By pushing his nomination through both the committee and the full Senate, Senator CARPER and Leader REID have denied Mr. Mayorkas a chance to win bipartisan support.

I have only voted against one nominee who has come through our committee, only 1 out of 20. I would like to be able to vote for Mr. Mayorkas if, in fact, OIG shows him a clean bill. The reason it is sad that he can't win bipartisan support is that under the new Senate rules it is possible for my colleagues to confirm him without a single Republican vote. When they do that, they will be delivering to the Department a nominee who arrives with only his party's support, and he will be trailed by a cloud of doubt and discontent.

The allegations against Mr. Mayorkas relate mainly to his management of the EB-5 immigrant visa program in his role as Director of the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. As I understand it, the investigation into Mr. Mayorkas began in an unconventional way by one person speaking out after their heavily documented concerns were dismissed. To me, this only adds validity to the allegations.

In the course of its investigation, the DHS OIG discovered other allegations of impropriety, including conflicts of interest, misuse of position, mismanagement, and the appearance of impropriety. Those allegations could speak to a candidate's fitness for public service, especially if he is not fully cleared to help lead the Department of Homeland Security. It is wholly unreasonable to ask Senators to endorse the nominee's fitness for service until those questions are answered.

In an attempt to discredit the investigation, some people have cited the problems plaguing leadership in the DHS OIG office, the inspector general in particular. In fact, the Financial and Contracting Oversight Subcommittee of the Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs is currently conducting and will release soon their bipartisan investigation into a number of allegations.

While I agree those allegations surrounding OIG leadership are troubling, the problems of one person do not invalidate the work done by an office of over 650 people. OIG work in every agency should be taken seriously.

In January of this year, Senator CARPER joined me and members of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee in sending a letter to President Obama urging him to fill the vacant inspector general positions at a number of key agencies, including DHS. In that letter, we said, "Inspectors general are an essential component of government oversight." We do a disservice to that statement when we preclude the opportunity to, at a minimum, review the work done by the DHS OIG, draw our own conclusions, and then vote accordingly without all the facts before us.

Even more concerning, by denigrating the open DHS OIG investigation, the Senate is sending a message to other OIGs that their investigations don't matter. Obviously, that is incredibly significant given our dependence on these watchdogs to oversee the huge government agencies and bureaucracies created by this body. We must respect and support the work done by inspectors general. In my opinion, the damage being done to the DHS OIG and the respect of IGs throughout the government by holding this vote is far worse than any damage done by the office's current leadership.

The results of this investigation are not the only unknown regarding Mr. Mayorkas's service as Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. Despite a number of concerns regarding national security and criminal vulnerabilities in the EB-5 program, we know the program expanded drastically under the nominee's hand and we have not yet seen evidence that he pursued significant regulatory changes to address the weaknesses that were known.

Two months ago I personally asked DHS and other agencies for an answer on how the administration is dealing with the concerns, and I have received no response as of yet. These include an October 18 letter in which I requested information from Acting Secretary Rand Beers on EB-5 national security concerns identified by the agency itself in a draft report. I received no response.

The same day, I also asked Acting ICE Director John Sandweg for the same information. I received no response.

I also requested information from National Security Adviser Susan Rice regarding known national security concerns created by the EB-5 program. To date, I have received no response.

Just last month, on November 1, Senator GRASSLEY and I requested information from Acting Secretary Beers on how the agency is addressing the known national security concerns with EB-5. Again, silence. No response.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD these letters requesting information.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Washington, DC, October 18, 2013.

Acting Secretary RAND BEERS,
U.S. Department of Homeland Security,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ACTING SECRETARY BEERS: I write to request certain information related to the EB-5 "investor visa" program operated by the Department of Homeland Security's U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS).

It is my understanding the Secretary's office issued a tasking to U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) titled "Request for Information Implications of ICE Case Against Procurement Agent." I understand the tasking requested ICE identify any gaps in procedure and information in the EB-5 program and recommend mitigating steps. In response, ICE allegedly counted several vulnerabilities, all relating to criminal and/or national security threats.

I would like to learn more about any program vulnerabilities identified by the ICE assessment.

Please provide my office with the following documents and information:

1. A copy of the tasking referenced above;
2. A copy of the ICE/HSI response referenced above;
3. An explanation of what issues and concerns led to the issuance of the tasking;
4. An explanation of how the ICE/HSI response was received, including the date of receipt, whether a briefing occurred, and if any follow up information was requested; and
5. An explanation of subsequent actions, if any, taken by or on behalf of the Secretary following the receipt of the ICE/HSI response.

Further, I also ask you provide your assessment of the national security and fraud vulnerabilities in the EB-5 program, if any, and how you plan to address them.

I appreciate your urgent attention to this matter. I request your response by October 31, 2013. Should you have any questions, please contact Keith Ashdown on my committee staff.

Thank you for your consideration and assistance.

Sincerely,

TOM A. COBURN, M.D.,
U.S. Senator.

Washington, DC, October 18, 2013.

Acting Director JOHN SANDWEG,
U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement,
Washington, DC.

DEAR DIRECTOR SANDWEG: I write to request certain information related to the EB-5 "investor visa" program operated by the Department of Homeland Security's U.S.

Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS).

It has recently come to my attention that the Secretary's office may have concerns regarding the EB-5 program, which it communicated to U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) and Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) several months ago by allegedly issuing a tasking titled "Request for Information Implications of ICE Case Against Procurement Agent."

I understand the tasking requested ICE to identify gaps in procedure and information in the EB-5 program and recommend mitigating steps. In response, ICE allegedly counted several vulnerabilities, all relating to criminal and/or national security threats.

Please provide my office with the following documents and information:

1. A copy of ICE/HSI's response to the tasking; and
2. A copy of any other reviews or requests for information that ICE or HSI conducted of the EB-5 program after this tasking.

In addition, I ask that you arrange for the appropriate officials at ICE or HSI to provide a briefing to my staff about the ICE/HSI review of the EB-5 program.

I appreciate your urgent attention to this matter. I request your response by October 31, 2013. Should you have any questions, please contact Keith Ashdown on my committee staff.

Thank you in advance for your consideration.

Sincerely,

TOM A. COBURN, M.D.,
U.S. Senator.

Washington, DC, October 18, 2013.

Hon. SUSAN RICE,
National Security Advisor, The White House,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MS. RICE: I am writing to request your assistance in understanding potential criminal and national security weaknesses in the EB-5 "investor visas" program operated by U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services.

My office obtained a copy of a document entitled, "Forensic Assessment of Financial Flows Relating to EB-5 Regional Centers," which appears to have been prepared at the request of National Security Staff (NSS). This document, marked draft, focuses on financial issues associated with the program. It references an additional review: "Vulnerabilities relating to possible infiltration by terrorist groups or foreign operatives are also before the NSS and are being addressed separately by the interagency."

I am writing to request information about these assessments and any actions taken in response to their findings.

Please provide my office with the following documents and information:

A briefing from the appropriate officials on the National Security Council staff who can speak to the process of these interagency assessments, their findings, and any actions that were taken to address any vulnerabilities;

Any direction provided to DHS or USCIS to address potential vulnerabilities identified in either assessment;

A copy of the final forensic assessment;

A copy of any document or memorandum summarizing the findings of the NSS or interagency "relating to possible infiltration or foreign operatives";

A summary of any steps the National Security Council took to inform Congress of potential vulnerabilities identified through these interagency reviews.

I appreciate your urgent attention to this matter. I request your response by October 31, 2013. Should you have any questions, please contact Keith Ashdown on my committee staff.

Thank you for your consideration and assistance.

Sincerely,

TOM A. COBURN, M.D.,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, November 1, 2013.

Hon. RAND BEERS,
Acting Secretary, Department of Homeland Security, Washington, DC.

DEAR ACTING SECRETARY BEERS: We write today regarding the EB-5 immigrant investor program operated by U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services (USCIS). We have significant concerns about the fraud and national security vulnerabilities of this program. Further information is critical to Congress's understanding of the program, especially at a time when permanent reauthorization of the program is under consideration by Congress.

It is our understanding that the Department's Office of Intelligence and Analysis has conducted a review of security issues related to the program within the last year or two. Therefore, we respectfully request the following:

1) Please make a copy of the Office of Intelligence and Analysis review available to us and our staff to review. A classified setting is available through Senate Security, if necessary.

Additionally, please provide the following information:

17) What regulations has USCIS developed or proposed with regard to denying immigrant investor petitions for fraud or national security concerns? Please provide a copy of any such regulations.

Given the seriousness of the potential security implications of any vulnerability in the EB-5 visa program, we would appreciate your urgent assistance and a response by no later than November 19th. If you have any questions regarding this letter, please contact Tristan Leavitt of Ranking Member Grassley's staff or Keith Ashdown of Ranking Member Coburn's staff.

Sincerely,

CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,
Ranking Member,
Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate.

TOM A. COBURN, M.D.,
Ranking Member,
Committee on Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs, U.S. Senate.

Mr. COBURN. Given that we are considering promoting Director Mayorkas to be second-in-command at DHS, it is appropriate that we consider how he managed this program and whether he addressed criminal and national security concerns, including exploitation of the EB-5 regional center program by terrorists, spies, and other threatening actors. These weaknesses were apparently the subject of repeated examinations by the administration.

I have repeatedly pressed the administration for more information regarding the weaknesses in the EB-5 program under Director Mayorkas and what actions it has taken to remedy those weaknesses. The chairman has declined to join in this inquiry. Why is that? Why would the chairman decline to join in finding out the truth? I have not received documents or any of the information I have requested.

At the same time there is no public record of steps Director Mayorkas has taken to address EB-5 concerns. For example, to date, USCIS has failed to promulgate any regulations shutting down regional centers being exploited by criminals or terrorists. This raises serious concerns with me.

When Congress created the EB-5 program in 1990, the goal was to stimulate the U.S. economy through job creation and capital investment by foreign investors. To that end, the original program—called the basic immigrant investor program—required immigrant investors to invest $1 million in a commercial enterprise that would create or preserve at least 10 jobs. The investor was initially granted conditional permanent residency, but after 2 years and proving the creation of 10 jobs, they were eligible to become a permanent resident.

In 1992 Congress authorized a second EB-5 pilot program allowing immigrants to pool investments through DHS-approved regional centers. In seeking approval from DHS, the regional center submits a proposal to DHS detailing how it plans to promote economic growth in that region. By investing in a regional center, immigrant investors can take advantage of relaxed job standards to measure both direct and indirect job creation. While direct jobs are actual identifiable jobs for qualified employees, indirect jobs are considered those created collaterally by the investment.

While the regional center program was set to expire at the end of 2012, last September it was reauthorized for 3 more years. Despite known national security concerns, no changes were made to the program by the Judiciary Committee.

In total, over 25,000 people are currently in the United States through the EB-5 program. Since its inception, the EB-5 program has been plagued with wide-ranging problems. Mr. Mayorkas took over this program in 2009. There has been a notable expansion of the program since he took it over. It now sees $3.3 billion passed from foreign investors in exchange for visas to reside in our country. Yet the serious security weaknesses have persisted, as well as alarm among senior officials. These problems include the agency failing to determine if the program is meeting its basic goal of creating 10 jobs per investment and defrauding would-be immigrants with breaches of national security with suspected terrorists using the program to enter the United States.

In 2012 the national security staff coordinated a review of the EB-5 regional center program by five agencies focused on vulnerabilities relating to the financial flows and securities offerings that routinely accompany the investment component of the EB-5 program. That draft report raised major concerns with the investments being made by EB-5 investors. For example, the investigation found one regional center filed false documentation in an attempt to support the creation of jobs. The same report also noted investments being made to a business that never existed and could never exist, headed by an individual using a pseudonym due to a criminal record of importing counterfeit products into this country.

The draft review noted the high risk that EB-5 program participants may attempt to use the program as a tool or a channel for money laundering, tax evasion, or other illicit financial activity. This type of activity was aided by the fact that known criminals are not statutorily prohibited from owning, managing, or recruiting regional centers. We just reauthorized that.

This national security staff draft review also references another interagency review looking at the national security threats associated with the EB-5 program, stating that the vulnerabilities relating to possible infiltration by terrorist groups or foreign operatives are also before the NSS and are being addressed by the interagency task force.

Understanding we have only seen a draft of the national security staff's forensic audit and have not seen information about the interagency review of possible infiltration by terrorist groups or foreign operatives, I wrote to Susan Rice, the National Security Adviser, on October 18 requesting that information. She has not addressed any concerns. She has not answered our letter.

The Department of Homeland Security also conducted its own internal assessment of the EB-5 regional center program, examining criminal and national security vulnerabilities. In response to an apparent tasking from DHS Secretary, ICE prepared a review of the program. Here are the vulnerabilities they noted and identified: export of sensitive technology, economic espionage; use by foreign government agents, espionage; use by terrorists; investment fraud by regional centers; investment fraud by investors in this country; fraud conspiracies by investors and regional centers; illicit finance and money laundering.

The agency's own draft analysis makes clear that the EB-5 regional center program can be exploited by terrorists, criminals, and foreign operatives. Further, it identified regional centers as a means for facilitating espionage at the highest levels by foreign governments. To that end, the review by ICE proposed that the regional center program be sunset—be done away with—because there can be no safeguards that can be put in place that will ensure the integrity of the regional center model.

As I stated before, I sought more information about DHS and ICE's internal review of the EB-5 program. I wrote to Acting Secretary Beers on October 18 requesting information about the findings of this review and what actions were taken in response. I have not yet received a response to my inquiry.

Recently, we received a draft DHS OIG EB-5 regional center audit. It is my understanding that we are soon to get this final report. In the draft, it includes the following statement: USCIS—under Secretary Mayorkas—fails to ensure regional centers meet all program requirements. USCIS—under the nominee, Mr. Mayorkas—inconsistently applies program regulations and policies. USCIS doesn't always properly document decisions and responses, giving the appearance the program is vulnerable to inappropriate influence.

This is all under the guise of a nominee whom we will vote on late tonight.

Since the program is so poorly run by USCIS, the draft DHS OIG determined USCIS is limited in its ability to prevent fraud or national security threats that could harm the United States, nor could the agency see where the EB-5 program was improving the U.S. economy and creating jobs for U.S. citizens, as intended by Congress. This draft report also outlines a number of recommended actions for the Director.

Last week Senator CARPER asserted it was Congress's fault that the EB-5 program was susceptible to fraud and national security threats because it hadn't provided the proper statutory authority and that new statutory authority which was included in S. 744, the immigration bill, would have solved the problem. But the draft DHS OIG report makes clear that under its existing authority, the agency has the ability to issue regulations to deny and even terminate regional centers identified as fraudulent or national security risks but has failed to do so.

They also recommended that the Director provide USCIS with the authority to deny and terminate EB-5 regional center participants at any phase of the process when known connections to national security or fraud risks are identified; that they should make explicit that fraud and national security concerns can constitute a cause for revocation; that he should give USCIS the authority to verify that foreign funds were invested in companies that create U.S. jobs and to ensure requirements for the EB-5 regional center program are applied consistently to all participants. None of these recommendations request any additional congressional authority; therefore, it is at least arguable that the action could have been taken by Director Mayorkas to prevent national security vulnerabilities in the EB-5 program. That hasn't happened.

The draft report also recommends that other corrective action should be taken by Director Mayorkas as well.

Since USCIS failed to properly apply its existing EB-5 policies and procedures, DHS OIG recommended developing a memorandum of understanding with the Departments of Commerce, Labor, and the SEC “to provide expertise and involvement in the adjudication of applications and petitions for the EB-5 regional center program.”

A third recommendation in the draft report related to the failure of the agency to maintain any metric as to whether the program was actually achieving its intended purpose. The DHS OIG asserted that Director Mayorkas should “conduct comprehensive reviews to determine how EB-5 funds have actually stimulated growth in the U.S. economy in accordance with the intent of the program.” That hasn't been done.

Finally, the draft report directs Mr. Mayorkas to “ensure quality assurance steps to promote program integrity and ensure that Regional Centers comply with the Code of Federal Regulations.” The implication there is that they don't.

All of these recommendations raise serious concerns about the way Director Mayorkas was overseeing the EB-5 program and, in turn, should be considered as a qualifying factor to determining his fitness to be second in command in charge at the Department of Homeland Security.

To summarize, we know the national security staff and the Department of Homeland Security conducted reviews of the investor visa programs Mr. Mayorkas has been overseeing since 2009. These reviews found that the program created a danger to national security—including the threat of exploitation by spies, criminals, and other national security threats. I and others have asked for more information about the potential national security vulnerabilities in the EB-5 regional center program, and we have received no answers.

What we do know is that Director Mayorkas dramatically expanded a program that the administration and even DHS itself apparently believes to be a threat to national security. And according to a draft report by the inspector general, he did not take all of the actions which he should have taken and which were at his disposal to fix these vulnerabilities and to make sure this visa program wasn't bringing spies, terrorists, or other terror threats into the country.

Finally, I would say this vote is not fair to the Department of Homeland Security. DHS is the agency we trust to secure our borders, make our skies safe, and to help our Nation protect us from terrorism. We know the Department has faced many challenges and has often struggled to execute its responsibilities over the past 10 years since its inception. And DHS has some of the lowest morale in the government.

This week the Senate voted with strong bipartisan support to approve Jeh Johnson's nomination to be Secretary of the DHS. I was proud to support his nomination. He is the kind of leader DHS needs to help it address its many challenges and to fulfill its mission of making our Nation safe. He needs a strong second-in-command in whom he and all employees can have full confidence.

It is this body's job to vet those leaders and ensure they are beyond reproach. With the cloud of this investigation and with many of our unanswered questions about Director Mayorkas's tenure as the Director of USCIS, we do not have full confidence that he should be second in command at DHS.

By voting on him now, this body is sending the wrong message to all DHS employees. Right now, we cannot—let me repeat—we cannot determine whether Mr. Mayorkas is fit or unfit for this important position.

Finally, I would say this vote is not fair to the American people in confirming a nominee for such an important position who has not been properly vetted. The American public depends on us to fulfill our constitutional mandate to properly advise the President on certain executive branch nominees. Here, we are not doing that. We are not doing that. In fact, we are voting to install a nominee who could be seen as unfit to serve in the No. 2 position at DHS. Now, he may be fit, but this agency is tasked with protecting our country from terrorists. It is our responsibility to guarantee to the American public that the leaders at DHS are beyond reproach.

In this vote, Leader REID is not only ignoring the rights of the minority but the longstanding precedent of the Senate. He is ignoring history, and he is inviting us all to do the same. But history has a difficult way of teaching its lessons. It was long the purpose of the Senate's procedures to remember these lessons so the country does not have to suffer such lessons again and again.

My final comments are these: Those who are going to vote for Mr. Mayorkas do so at the risk of not knowing what the investigation shows. They also do so at the risk of obviating the oath they swore when they came to this body: to fairly and appropriately evaluate their decisions about advice and consent.

My hope is that Mr. Mayorkas is cleared. But, unfortunately, he won't have my vote and that of several of my colleagues because we don't have the information with which to make that judgment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. INHOFE. Madam President, I will first acknowledge that at 11:15 tonight we are going to be voting on the National Defense Authorization Act. It is a must-pass bill, one which has passed prior to December 31 every year for the last 53 years. So it is very significant, and I think people are tired of hearing about it because they recognize the significance and the fact that it has to be done. So I am not going to say anything about that.

I originally came down to talk about the problems we are having in my State of Oklahoma. I have a long list of people from all throughout the State who have talked about their insurance being cancelled, the increase in the deductibles and the cost of insurance, and about the crisis we are facing in the State of Oklahoma with ObamaCare.

Madam President, I will mention one thing which has been overlooked in this debate and which I have mentioned once before but a lot of people have not recognized, and this has come from the leaders on the Democrat side, including the President of the United States; that is, the ultimate goal of ObamaCare would be a single-payer system. A single-payer system is socialized medicine.

It is kind of interesting. I remember when we had Hillary health care back in the early 1990s, and we asked the question, if it doesn't work in Denmark, it doesn't work in Sweden, it doesn't work in Canada, it doesn't work in the U.K., why would it work here? They never said it, but they were thinking: If I were running it, it would work here. So that is the ultimate goal.

I will share a personal experience, and then I will yield to the rest of the Members who wish to talk about their States.

I had a personal experience 2 months ago. I went in for a colonoscopy, just a routine thing. After checking me and going through, they said: I have good news and bad news.

I said: All right. What is it?

The good news is your colon is fine. The bad news is you are about to die because you have 100 percent obstruction in two valves, 90 percent in two arteries and 75 percent in the other arteries.

So I had as an emergency four bypasses at that moment.

I say that because if I had been in the U.K., at my age there would be a mandatory 6-month waiting period, and I wouldn't be standing here today. If I had been in Canada, it is like 2 years. And I have heard our good friends, the doctors who are Members of the Senate, such as Senator BARRASSO, talking about what is happening in these other countries.

A few minutes ago I was visiting with Jackie Davidson, who is scheduled for open heart surgery on Monday. I was talking about, quite frankly, how it was much easier than I thought it was going to be. And the same thing happened with my wife.

But the point is that if you are in these countries, at a certain age it doesn't work. You are denied the opportunity to have surgery. So that needs to be in the back of our minds as we talk about the current problems we are having with ObamaCare and what the ultimate goal is.

Lastly, I will say I have been contacted by two of my good friends who are members of Parliament in the U.K., and they asked me this question: Why is it you and your country are now trying to adopt something that we are trying to get away from over here in the U.K.?

So let's keep in mind there is one big overriding problem that, if we cave in now, we will be reaching.

With that, I yield to my colleagues who wish to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. THUNE. Madam President, a number of my colleagues have come down here, and we have done so on a number of occasions because most of us are getting emails and phone calls and letters in our offices of real-world, real-life experiences that people are having with ObamaCare. It is a reminder that the things we do here have real-world impacts across the country.

As someone who represents the State of South Dakota, I came down here and shared a number of stories of constituents of mine who have been adversely impacted in the form of higher premiums, canceled coverages, higher deductibles—all doing great economic harm to the people in our respective States.

I will quickly share a note I received from a constituent in Rapid City, SD.

As my Congressional representative, you need to know how ObamaCare is harming my life and health care. My insurance company cancelled my policy. I am currently paying over $800 a month for a family of 4. To upgrade my policy I will be over $900 a month. If I sign up for ObamaCare, I would be paying over $2500 a month. I cannot think of any way this is considered affordable health care!

This is just another of many examples that I have from my State of South Dakota and that my colleagues have to point out how this is flawed and the economic harm it is doing to the American people and why it is so important that we here in the Senate take steps to change it and do it soon, before it is too late.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNSON of Wisconsin. Madam President, like the Senator from South Dakota, our office continues to get emails and phone calls and contacts from our constituents.

Tonight I would like to read an email received from David and Shannon McKichan. They write:

I am trying to contact you with very little left to do. My wife and I as of today received a notice that our health policy is going up from $389.00 per month to $1177.00 per month.

That is a more than 200 percent increase.

This is for the same level we have, which is an HSA policy, 5000.00 max out of pocket per year. This policy works for us as we are both self-employed small business owners. We have been hammered during the economic downturn and this is the straw that breaks the camel's back. We feel that our government is attacking us and we have nowhere to turn. We are both in our mid 50's and if things stay the same will be without health insurance. I have always provided for my own needs but this is making things impossible.

Please advise what we are to do. Please fight for us and know we do not have a voice without you. I was a city council representative for 15 years and always fought for the working man but I now know that it is becoming a losing battle.

This is just one example. Last week we were on the floor, and I read a number of emails saying the same things:

You need to understand how cheated we feel.

This is not right.

I cannot afford this.

Why are we being forced to change to a plan that has benefits we don't need?

Please help.

Sir, I'm begging for your help.

I'm feeling very upset & stressed.

This is unfair and hurting working families.

This law is hurting us, be our voice.

We need your help.

I guess we are the collateral damage?

Why are they trying to destroy us in the process?

We are scared.

We are hearing the voice of the American people. We are hearing the voice of Wisconsinites. The Senate must hear the voice of the American people and act. The sooner the better. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, like my colleagues, and as I have done several times before, I come to the floor to share the voice of one of many Iowans who have contacted me over the sticker shock that they are experiencing under the Affordable Care Act. This time I quote a constituent from Sioux County, IA, northwest Iowa. That constituent writes:

I am a pastor in rural Iowa and early this past summer, trusting naively in the integrity of our President's repeated promise that "If you like your health insurance you can keep it. Period[.]" I made a change in my policy, moving to a higher deductible to save the church money. Now I have been informed that because of that change, my policy is no longer grandfathered and therefore I will be forced out of it in a year and compelled to purchase a much more expensive (un)Affordable Care Act-compliant policy.

I am young, male, healthy, and will not qualify for any subsidy. In effect, because of legislation Democrats supported, my government is kicking me off from health coverage that I carefully researched, chose and like a lot—and is forcing me to buy coverage that I do not need at a price I scarcely can afford.

And the Government has the audacity to resort to Orwellian doublespeak and call such a draconian policy the "Affordable Care Act."

Please convey to your Democratic colleagues that I grew up on a dairy farm and now pastor a church of farmers. I am the epitome of middle class America that they claim to champion.

This bill is unjust. It is based on lies to Americans like myself. It hurts real people, including the church I serve.

I have done my job. I have shared this constituent's message with my colleagues as he asked me to do. I hope they were listening.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. BARRASSO. Mr. President, I join my colleagues here on the floor to hear them tell stories that we are hearing from our constituents at home. I saw the newspaper from the State of the Presiding Officer, the New York Times, front-page story, "Uninsured Skeptical of Health Care Law in Poll."

This whole law was passed to try to deal with issues of the uninsured. This article on the front page of today's New York Times says 53 percent of the uninsured disapprove of the law.

Then they go through some of the numbers and it looks as though for the same number of people who think they will be helped, an equal number of people who are uninsured think they will actually be hurt by this law.

Another headline, Wall Street Journal, "Errors Continue to Plague Health

Site." But the health care Web site is just the tip of the iceberg. Sure, there have been Web site failures, but the thing that is hurting Americans all around the country is the higher premiums the Senator from Iowa talked about, the canceled coverage the Senator from Iowa talked about, people who cannot keep their doctor in spite of the President's promise, fraud and identity theft, and higher copays and deductibles which we now know are actually going to be higher, after the law has been passed, specifically for the bronze policies, than they were all last year until the law came into effect.

I would like to share a letter from a woman in Carbon County, WY, who writes about the harmful effect of the health care law for her life and for her health care.

She says:

I currently have health insurance through my husband's employer, but the reality is that the current health insurance that we have may not be available much longer. This is scary to me, since I recently did some insurance shopping for my mother.

She said her mother is 63 years old and in good health. She said:

I was only able to get two quotes. The cheapest quote was for $756 a month with a $6,000 deductible.

So we see higher premiums and we see higher copays and deductibles.

The prescription deductible for that particular plan was $500, and then the copay for prescriptions was still around $35. The other quote seemed like a better plan and had better co-pay on prescriptions, but that premium was $985 a month. And that is also with a $6,000 deductible. What the heck. Who can afford these kind of premiums? That is more than most mortgage payments.

Yet the President of the United States said if you like your coverage, you can keep your coverage; if you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor.

I went on national TV, talked with Bill Clinton a few days before the Web site was opened, and he said it will be easier to use than Amazon, cheaper than your cell phone bill, and if you like your doctor, you can keep your doctor.

It is fascinating, the President was so clueless about his own law, and here we are today, people suffering all around the country, and the President doing nothing about it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BURR. Madam President, I came to the floor last week, and for 45 minutes I pulled this file out of my desk. It was my notes that I talked about in 2009 about the Affordable Care Act before it became law. I talked about the increases that were projected in premiums and deductibles. I talked about the networks that were changed, the doctors that would not be available.

I was not a prophet. I was reporting what people such as the Chief Actuary at CMS were saying at the time. Hospitals were going to close, doctors were not going to take patients under the new plan. More important, the premiums and deductibles were going to become unaffordable, not affordable. I am tonight going to read a letter from Donna Hulcher from Clemmons, NC, right in the middle of the State.

We own a small automotive repair shop and have had continuous health insurance coverage our entire life, either through our company or for the past several years on the individual market. We learned that our high deductible plan with an HSA was not grandfathered into the Affordable Care Act about 4 months ago. Of course at that time, no pricing was available. We were paying 679.00 per month, and felt that we were protected from catastrophic sickness/injury, and we liked the flexibility the HSA provided in meeting our other expenses like dental and optical. We checked with Blue Cross once the cost for the new silver plans they are mapping us to was available, and it is going to cost 1379 per month. What a shock to the system and I am not at all sure it has as much coverage as what we are losing. I am pretty much a deer in the headlights, not knowing where we are going to turn, afraid to get onto the ACA website and give my information because I don't trust its security. It is totally foreign to me to apply for government subsidies for something we have always paid for and never depended on the government to help us. This goes against everything we believe in as being hard working, independent people. There are problems with health care and with costs, no doubt but this is not making it more affordable and from what I am hearing, doctors are retiring early or not taking this new policy. I feel like I am spinning the wheels of my brain trying to find out what is the right way to go. This has pulled the rug from under our family!

We are now within 3 days of what was the cutoff. We have now extended the enrollment period to the end of March. But insurers are required, April 1 to April 27 of 2014, to submit their pricing for 2015. I have heard the folks talk about this is only about 8 percent of the American people that this applies to in 2014. In 2015 it is all of the American people. It is big business, it is small business.

You know what is going to happen when they price this product with no experience of the risk pool this year. Prices are going to go up. Deductibles are going to go up. If you think it is unaffordable this year, wait until you see what hits the 90 percent of the American people in 2015.

It is time for us to change this. It is time for us to fix it. It is time for us to get an affordable health care policy in place in this country.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BOOZMAN. Madam President, as a result of ObamaCare, millions will be forced to use money that they would have used to pay rent, help their children attend college, or invest in a business. Instead, they are going to have to use that money to pay for higher premiums and skyrocketing deductibles. Here is one such example from Huntsville, AR, which is in a congressional district which I used to represent when I was in the House. This constituent writes about how he and his family must have to take drastic steps to be able to afford the cost of ObamaCare, not the least of which includes returning to work after retiring last year. The email reads:

I have never before contacted a Senator until today. Sir, I am outraged about the ObamaCare issue and the Affordable Care Act. Because of recent developments over the affordable health care act, and the obvious problematic issues related to its operation, policy and implementation, we are selling two of our vehicles to save money.

This is due to the direct impact of this legislation and due to the broken promises of President Barack Obama that have been repeated over and over to us for 3 years.

We are also canceling our cable TV, and will save about $1,500 per year. We are cutting back on Internet, switching to save another $1,000 per year. We are Christmas shopping in January. Our purchase of a new vehicle is now delayed for another 3 years. Our planned vacation trips for 2014 and beyond are being pared back.

This is the No. 1 issue I am hearing from Arkansans, the high cost, in some cases the unaffordable cost, of ObamaCare.

It is interesting, as we hear other Members of the Senate come and read the same types of emails, the same types of letters that they are getting, they all have the same thing—they are put in positions that are simply untenable. They simply do not have the money to afford the so-called new insurance that they needed as their old insurance was dropped from them.

We need health care reform, but ObamaCare certainly is not the answer. We need to transition the employer-based private insurance market toward one that allows for flexibility, choice, portability, and fairness. Let's allow small business owners to pool together to purchase group insurance, introduce portability into the market. These are things that we need to do, and continue—some of these things are actually in the Affordable Care Act. Yet the reality is we can do that without $1 trillion of increased taxes, and rapidly, because of the way that the business community is responding, making us a nation of part-time employees.

We need to allow individuals to purchase insurance across State lines. We need to expand health savings accounts and flexible savings accounts. These are free market reforms that would drive down costs.

The problem that we had prior to introducing the Affordable Care Act was affordability. What has happened is, instead of driving down costs, we have driven up costs dramatically because of the way the bill was structured.

We also need medical malpractice reform. I am an optometrist by training. I can tell you in the course of taking care of patients that there are people all over the country who have to do things that are above and beyond, sometimes, the things they believe they need to do in order to protect themselves. As a result, there are no ifs, ands, or buts, that definitely drives costs.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, I had not anticipated coming to the floor tonight to talk about health care in this country, but I feel compelled to do so after listening to a number of our colleagues share with us letters and messages from folks whose lives have been adversely affected apparently because of changes made in the coverage of their health care through the Affordable Care Act.

I regret any of the consequences that have been shared with us here this evening. My hope is that we will find ways over the next coming weeks and months to address the kinds of concerns that have been raised.

I just wish I heard some of that concern in past years as we prepared to take up the Affordable Care Act. As a member of the Finance Committee, I wish I heard those kinds of concerns about the tens of millions of people in this country who really don't have any health care coverage tonight—some 40 million. For a lot of them, this health care is a chance for them to go to the emergency room of a hospital. When they get really sick, they can be admitted to the hospital and get the care they need. Without health care coverage, it is hugely expensive ultimately for the rest of us because we pay for it. Where is the outcry on behalf of those tens of millions of people?

Where was the outcry 4 years ago when we had several million people who signed up for the Medicare prescription drug program and found that when their purchases of prescription medicines reached a certain level—$3,000 or $4,000 a year—instead of Medicare paying 75 percent of the cost for their medicines beyond that in a year, Medicare paid nothing, which is known as the doughnut hole? A lot of people fell into it—a lot of older people fell into it—and they could not afford the medicines they needed to stay well or stay out of the hospital. Where was the outcry on behalf of fixing that problem?

Where was the outcry on behalf of the millions of young people who were dropped off of their parents' health insurance plans when they aged out at 22? Where was the outcry in those cases?

We have had Republican and Democratic Presidents who have had a chance for years—for decades to do something about the fact that we spend twice as much money for health care as the rest of the world but don't necessarily get better results and don't cover everybody. Frankly, I didn't hear a lot of outcry from our friends on the other side of the aisle during all those years.

As much as we feel for the people whose stories they shared with us here tonight, I wish that same sympathy and empathy had been extended to some of the people who now don't fall into that doughnut hole when their prescription drugs exceed a certain amount during a year.

Now we have people who are 22, 23, 24, 25 years old who don't age off of their parents' health care coverage. They are covered until their 26th birthday.

We will add to the number of people who have health care coverage. Somewhere between 5 and 10 million people will have health care coverage either because they are able to qualify under the Medicaid Program or because they will get coverage through one of our State exchanges across this Nation.

Is the Affordable Care Act perfect? No. Are there problems with it? Sure. Anything that is this big and this difficult to do, there will be problems. I think the implementation of the start-up in October and November was totally unacceptable. We are trying to work our way through it and provide the kind of access and explanation for this coverage that people deserve, and eventually we will get this right.

The outcry we now hear attributed to the implementation of the Affordable Care Act reminds me a lot of the outcry we heard—I want to say 2006 and 2007—when we were beginning to implement the Medicare prescription drug program. To put it bluntly, it was a mess. People were confused by it. The information technology didn't work. The headlines in the newspaper looked a lot like the headlines in October and November and even now. But a year or two later, guess what. We fixed the program with everything but the doughnut hole. And now we fixed the doughnut hole—it started about 4 years ago—through the Affordable Care Act. People don't fall off that cliff anymore the way they used to.

So rather than simply criticizing the provisions of the Affordable Care Act that are troublesome or problematic, why don't we fix them? That is what we did with the prescription drug program, Part D under Medicare, and that is what we should do here.

I did not come here tonight to respond to our colleagues. I just felt somebody needed to say something, and I am pleased I had that opportunity.

MAYORKAS NOMINATION

Madam President, I rise tonight to speak again in strong support of the nomination of Alejandro Mayorkas to serve as the Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security. I spoke yesterday about Director Mayorkas' impeccable credentials and experience that has prepared him for this important position. My colleague from Louisiana Senator LANDRIEU did the same yesterday.

Today I would like to address some of the concerns about Director Mayorkas that have been raised by our friends on the other side of the aisle and seek to set the record straight.

I understand that some of our Republican colleagues believe we cannot move forward with consideration of Director Mayorkas' nomination until the Office of Inspector General finishes its investigation that it began—get this—in September of 2012. There was an investigation as to his management of the complex EB-5 program some 15 months ago.

Well, I must say I disagree with my Republican colleagues. I think we have waited long enough, and let me explain why.

As I said before, the Department of Homeland Security has been without a Deputy Secretary since April of this year—8 full months—and 6 months have passed since Director Mayorkas was nominated. For many of those months, we did not have a Senate-confirmed Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

Three days before Mr. Mayorkas' confirmation hearing in July, information about the OIG investigation was leaked to Congress and the media in a highly irregular manner. The information that was leaked indicated that in September of 2012, the Office of Inspector General for the Department of Homeland Security had received allegations about conflicts of interest, misuse of position, and an appearance of impropriety by Director Mayorkas and other agency officials. We also now know that the OIG did not actually begin investigating these allegations for almost 1 year after receiving them.

Importantly, the OIG confirmed that this was not in any way a criminal investigation. Let me say that again because some of our friends on the other side of the aisle seem to be confused about this. The OIG confirmed in July of this year and reconfirmed in December of this year, earlier this month, that this is not and never has been a criminal investigation.

To my amazement, Director Mayorkas has never been contacted nor interviewed by the OIG about this investigation. There was no phone call, no letter, no email. There was nothing in 15 months. Director Mayorkas only learned of this investigation after its existence had been leaked to the Congress in July, just days before our committee hearing on his nomination. Even then, Director Mayorkas ably and vigorously disputed the allegations in his interviews with committee members who would meet with him and staff who would meet with him as well at his confirmation meeting in July.

Unfortunately, rather than question the nominee about this matter and give him a chance to refute these anonymous allegations, Republican members of our committee boycotted his confirmation hearing and have refused to meet with Director Mayorkas to give him an opportunity to respond to these allegations from people whose names and faces we don't even know.

Senator GRASSLEY said this week that Director Mayorkas has been given a chance to defend himself and has "utterly failed" to respond to Senator GRASSLEY's letters. On the contrary. Director Mayorkas did, in fact, respond to Senator GRASSLEY's letters this past August 20. In fact, he would have gladly spoken with Senator GRASSLEY or any other Senator, Democratic or Republican, about the allegations face to face. That is the way we do things in Delaware. I can't imagine it is not the way we do things in other States.

I am perplexed that an even better option—speaking to Director Mayorkas himself—was not taken advantage of by Senator GRASSLEY. In fact, I offered to fly to Iowa with Director Mayorkas in August to meet with Senator GRASSLEY face to face so that Senator GRASSLEY could have his questions answered face to face, but, sadly, Senator GRASSLEY declined.

So I think the record shows that Director Mayorkas has been eager to meet with Senators on both sides of the aisle to answer their questions—not to duck them but to answer them. But our colleagues on the other side of the aisle have been unwilling to give him what seems to me should be a common courtesy.

Again, we are not talking about a criminal investigation. We are talking about the mismanagement of a program and allegations brought by people whom, again, my staff has never been able to interview.

Getting back to the OIG investigation, of course, in a perfect world, I would prefer that it be completed before moving forward. At one point, I thought it would be.

First, let me make it clear to all that there is nothing improper about the chairman of a committee asking for an update on the status of a pending investigation. There is nothing improper about that. Accordingly, in July Dr. COBURN joined me in inquiring about the status of this investigation. I was told it would be completed in October. Again, this investigation started a year earlier—in September of 2012.

In October of this year, I inquired again about the status and was told it would be completed in December.

On December 2 a bipartisan group of committee staff participated in a telephone call with the head of investigations at the Office of Inspector General at the Department of Homeland Security to receive a status update. They were told it would likely take 2 or 3 more months to complete the investigation. In fact, every time we have spoken with the IG staff, we have been told they are just 2 or 3 months away from completing an investigation that began some 15 months ago.

I respect that the OIG must do its job, but we have to do our job too, and the President has to do his job. We cannot wait another 2 months—every other month—especially for a position as critical as this one.

Lest we forget, the Department of Homeland Security is charged with helping to protect our Nation and its citizens from all kinds of attacks, foreign and domestic—terrorists from abroad, homegrown terrorists from within—securing our borders, our aircraft, you name it. They respond to all kinds of natural disasters whether they happen to be hurricanes or tornadoes. There is a lot going on. It is a busy and tough neighborhood to run and manage, and we need confirmed leadership.

I thank our Democrat and Republican colleagues for their vote earlier this week on behalf of Jeh Johnson to become Secretary of the Department. He needs a team, and he needs a team that includes Alejandro Mayorkas.

During the call I mentioned a little bit ago with the bipartisan committee staff in December of this month and trying to find out the status of the investigation, the OIG confirmed that to date they found no evidence of criminal wrongdoing by anybody at DHS, including Director Mayorkas. That is right, no evidence, none, nada.

Given that the investigation appears to be months away from conclusion and that its completion date has already slipped several times and given the confirmation by the OIG that there is no evidence of criminal wrongdoing, I believe it is time to move forward. In fact, it is past time to move forward.

The allegations that have been made public cluster around Director Mayorkas' administration of the EB-5 visa program. It is an extremely complicated program that provides foreign investors an opportunity to immigrate to the United States in exchange for significant investments in job-creating enterprises right here in America. The Department of Homeland Security OIG just completed an audit of this program, as a matter of fact, but I will get to that in a little bit.

The primary complaint about Director Mayorkas concerns an EB-5 related application by Gulf Coast Funds Management, the regional center which has ties to Virginia Governor-elect Terry McAuliffe.

Anonymous sources have reportedly alleged that Director Mayorkas improperly intervened to help change a draft legal decision so it would come out in favor of Chairman McAuliffe's former company, Greentech Automotive.

First of all, I think it is important for everybody to understand upfront that Greentech Automotive did not get what they wanted. Let me say that again. The final decision in this case did not come out in Greentech Automotive's favor, from the agency run by Director Mayorkas.

Second, it is important to note that the author of the Greentech decision, the former head of the Administrative Appeals Office at the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, Mr. Perry Rhew, told my staff last week that he strongly disputed the allegation that Director Mayorkas had inappropriately influenced his decision.

Many of the other allegations that have been made public about the Director's management of the EB-5 program contend that applications appear to have been processed without regard to security concerns. However, in reviewing the leaked emails that were attached to these accusations, Director Mayorkas actually says the exact opposite.

I found this disconnect between the allegations and the emails presented as evidence so striking that I am going to read exactly—I want my colleagues to hear exactly what Director Mayorkas said in this email to support his contention on January 30 of this year concerning his application for a regional center in Las Vegas. This is what he said:

We will take the time needed to resolve the security issue and we will not act until we have achieved resolution. I agree that we need to run enhanced security and integrity checks.

This email directly refutes the claim that Director Mayorkas was pushing to expedite applications despite the security concerns raised by his subordinates.

In another email attached to one of the letters making accusations against Director Mayorkas, he forwards a question about Mr. McAuliffe's company to subordinates and he notes—this is how he does it: He says—Mr. Mayorkas' words:

I want to make sure that we are providing customer service consistent with our standards, but that we are not providing any preferential treatment.

I would ask: Are these the actions of someone who is trying to exert improper influence or subvert security checks? I think any fair-minded person would agree the answer is no. No. Even our committee's ranking member, my friend, Dr. COBURN, indicated that the allegations against Mr. Mayorkas, although serious, are most likely not grounded in reality. I don't want to mince his words, so I will quote him directly. In reference to the allegations against Mr. Mayorkas, Dr. COBURN said in a committee meeting—again, this is a quote: "I doubt they are true, but we do not have the facts."

I agree with Dr. COBURN. We don't have any facts pointing to any sort of wrongdoing by Director Mayorkas at all, as best I can tell. None of the anonymous sources or so-called whistleblowers have presented information to the majority regarding their concerns, something I think is unprecedented in these types of circumstances for our committee. We have been unable to question those bringing these anonymous concerns on the majority side, and our Republican friends on the committee—and maybe largely in the Senate—have refused to talk to the accused, and he has not been accused of any criminal wrongdoing. That doesn't add up to me. Maybe it does to some people. That just doesn't add up. We don't get to talk to the people who raised these concerns and our Republican friends won't talk to the accused who has not been accused of any criminal wrongdoing.

On the one hand, we have over 30 people from both sides of the aisle who are well-known and hugely respected citizens who have gone on the record with glowing support for Director Mayorkas. On the other hand, not one person—not one—has stepped forward publicly opposing Director Mayorkas.

Some of the people who have written in strong support of Director Mayorkas include the last Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, Jane Holl Lute; the last Senate-confirmed inspector general of the Department of Homeland Security, Richard Skinner, who is a Bush appointee; and the three most senior border security officials in the George W. Bush administration, Robert Bonner, Al Ralph Basham, and Jason Ayhern.

The fact is that Director Mayorkas has been proactively addressing national security and fraud concerns in the EB-5 program for years. Soon after being confirmed, he took a number of administrative and operational steps to address national security concerns. Where he lacked the administrative authority to improve the EB-5 program, he repeatedly appealed to Congress for the legislative authority he needed.

Unfortunately, Congress dealt Director Mayorkas and his entire agency a bad hand when we authorized the EB-5 program in 2012. We failed—we failed—to give the agency any of the legal authorities that Director Mayorkas and his team at CIS had specifically requested in order to enable them—and they just requested in 2012, made a request—in order to enable them to address the national security and fraud vulnerabilities they could not address on their own. It said: Congress, we would like to do this. We need the authority; please give it to us. They started asking for that in June of 2012.

Earlier this year, during the Judiciary Committee's debate on S. 744, the immigration reform bill, Senator LEAHY introduced an amendment that made virtually all the national security fixes that Director Mayorkas had requested. While the comprehensive immigration reform bill passed the Senate with strong bipartisan support, it is unfortunately stalled in the House.

Fortunately, Senate Committee Chairman PATRICK LEAHY is working on a stand-alone bill to address these national security and fraud concerns, much of what Director Mayorkas and his team asked for in June a year ago. I urge all of my colleagues concerned about security issues in the program to join me as a cosponsor of that bill.

It strikes me as grossly unfair to punish Director Mayorkas for the inability of Congress to address the vulnerabilities in the EB-5 program that Director Mayorkas and his team brought to our attention and asked us to fix over a year and a half ago. In essence, those of us in Congress failed to do our job. Yet Director Mayorkas is taking the fall for our failure. How is that fair? I will tell my colleagues: It is not.

I mentioned previously that the OIG completed an EB-5 audit, and although that report has not been publicly released yet, some of my colleagues have been discussing the OIG's findings earlier today. In light of that, I think this is a good time to get some facts straight because this audit, remarkably, misses some key facts.

First of all, the report says the EB-5 program is vulnerable to fraud and national security risks and that the legislation that created the program makes it difficult to fully address those risks. That is something that has been well-known by Congress and the administration long before this report and long before Director Mayorkas took over the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services in August of 2009. The emails I just discussed demonstrate that Director Mayorkas did not take national security and fraud matters lightly. In fact, a review of the legislative history of the last year and a half might suggest that we take them lightly.

Despite the widespread knowledge about the national security and fraud vulnerabilities in the EB-5 program—and all visa programs, for that matter—CIS did not and does not have the authority that it asked Congress for in order to adequately police regional centers and the EB-5 program. I find it incredible that the OIG audit report makes no mention of Director Mayorkas' efforts to get Congress to pass legislation to address this problem since June of 2012.

In the absence of being granted those authorities by Congress, Director Mayorkas took it on himself to implement other reforms. Yet many of these reforms took place before or during this audit—and yet, incredibly, those reforms are not even mentioned in the audit report.

One of his first actions as the Director was to elevate the Fraud Detection and National Security Office to a director reporting directly to Mr. Mayorkas. This ensured that national security professionals had a seat at the management table and a voice in all major decisions.

He expanded reporting requirements and security checks for regional centers, which led CIS to increase the number of national security investigations in the EB-5 program by more than 50 percent in the last 4 years.

He increased EB-5 staffing from 9 people in 2009 to more than 80 today, and hired senior economists and national security officers to work side by side with immigration specialists.

He positively engaged other agencies such as the Securities and Exchange Commission, the FBI, and the Treasury Department to help police the program. In fact, Senator GRASSLEY himself noted this week that Director Mayorkas convened a national security staff working group to examine the problem last year.

The actions I have described are not the actions taken by someone who does not care about national security.

The audit report says the EB-5 adjudication process is ambiguous. CIS has recognized there was a need for a consolidated adjudication manual and they published one in May of this year—one more fact that was not even mentioned in the audit report.

The audit report says the program is fraught with the perception of outside influence. There is no denying the fact that this program gets a lot of attention, including from us—from Congress. In fact, the USCIS receives 1,500 queries about the EB-5 program each year from Congress, from Senators, from U.S. Representatives—1,500. As it turns out, almost half of our Senate colleagues on both sides of the aisle have inquired about the EB-5 program since 2009. That is an enormous amount of interest from Congress in this one program. In many cases—most cases—that interest was provided or demonstrated to CIS on behalf of our constituents, from States from one corner of America to the other.

But let me be clear: The fact that this program garners a lot of attention from a lot of Members of Congress and a number of high-level officials from all parties about the frequency and status of pending applications does not mean that the Citizenship and Immigration Services adjudicators are swayed by the attention. Perception is not always reality. Contrary to what some have suggested or assumed, the OIG reported that all the files they reviewed in their audit—including the ones associated with Terry McAuliffe's company—appear to support the final decision.

Let me say that again. The OIG audit concluded that the evidence it reviewed in these cases supported the final decision.

Based on the evidence we have before us, I believe it is clear that Director Mayorkas has taken strong steps to improve the EB-5 program. These are the actions of a dedicated, thoughtful, and committed public servant. They are the actions of a leader who is willing to make tough but necessary decisions in order to shake things up and improve a program that needed improving. That is exactly the kind of leadership we need at the Department of Homeland Security. I think we need it across the Federal Government.

I also believe we need leaders who are committed to doing what they believe in their heart is the right thing to do. At his confirmation hearing in July, I specifically asked Director Mayorkas about the allegations raised by some of these anonymous sources. Director Mayorkas testified before this committee under oath that he has never put his finger on the scale of justice, and I have seen no evidence since then that would lead me to question his veracity.

I do not believe that we can allow rumors spread by anonymous sources to rule the day.

Some of our colleagues have been very critical of DHS shortcomings and they are quick to point out its failures. However, one of the major reasons the Department fails to live up to expectations more than they and the rest of us might like is because their top leadership ranks have been riddled with vacancies for much of this year, and the same is true of many other agencies. Again, it is not fair to criticize the agency on the one hand and yet seem content on the other to leave them without Senate-confirmed leadership for months on end. We can't have it both ways. We have some responsibility here as well.

It is time to stop playing political games. It is time to vote to confirm Ali Mayorkas for the Deputy Secretary position at DHS.

There is something else that came to my attention today that I thought was interesting. It is not from an anonymous source. It is not rumor or innuendo. It is actually a report from the Partnership for Public Service. One of the things they do at the partnership is issue, I think maybe on an annual basis, the rankings of the best places to work in the Federal Government in 2013 and, as it turns out, also maybe the worst, because they do a ranking from top to bottom.

I was dismayed to find out this week that the Department of Homeland Security ranked last—ranked last—on their list of Cabinet Departments in terms of employee morale—last. It is not the first year. It has happened for a number of years in a row. However, although the Department ranked last among all the Departments, the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, led by Director Mayorkas, was one of the highest ranked components within DHS, coming in at, I think out of 300 Federal agencies, No. 76, which, if my math is good, that puts them in maybe the top 25 percent of all agencies.

After Mr. Mayorkas took over in 2009, employee satisfaction with senior leadership there increased by over 20 percent. It has increased by over 20 percent since he took over in 2009.

Every now and then, in driving on my way to the train station in Wilmington to catch a train to come down here to start our day, I listen to the news. Usually I arrive at 7 o'clock. About a year ago I heard a report on NPR of an international study that was done involving thousands of people across the country. In the international study, they asked the same question of thousands of people from all walks of life with different kinds of jobs in different locations. The question that was asked of each of those thousands of people was, what is it about your job that you like? What is it about your job that you like the most? Not surprisingly, those people who were asked the question had different responses. Some people said they liked getting paid. Some people said they liked getting a pension. Some people said they liked having a vacation or having health care. Some people said they liked the environment in which they worked. Some people said they liked the folks they work with. But do you know what most people said? Most people said the thing they like most about their job is they felt the work they were doing was important and they felt they were making progress. Think about that. The reason most people cite for liking their job, the work they do, is because they know it is important and they feel they are making progress.

It is ironic to me—if you rely on the anonymous sources the majority side has not been permitted to talk with, it is ironic to me that in a department where morale has been low and a problem and a concern for years, at this agency that Mr. Mayorkas has led now for 4 years, employee morale is, by comparison, fairly high. He does not get any credit for that. But if employees really do care that the work they are doing is important and they are making progress, maybe that belief is reflected in these numbers. Maybe that is reflected in these numbers on behalf of the leadership that Mr. Mayorkas has provided for Citizenship and Immigration Services.

Let me close, if I could. My friend from Kansas has arrived.

There are a couple things I want us to keep in mind. This is one that is hard for me to understand. People whom we do not know, whom we on the majority side have not talked to and have not had an opportunity to hear from to hear their story—it is maybe unprecedented for that opportunity to be denied the majority or for the majority to deny that to the minority in a case like this. We have been denied that opportunity.

I think the person who is maybe best able to provide or to rebut or to respond to concerns that have been raised by these anonymous folks whom we have not been able to talk to is Mr.

Mayorkas himself, but our Republican colleagues have refused to talk to him. Even though there is no evidence of criminal wrongdoing, they refuse to talk to him to give him a chance to rebut or to respond to the accusations from anonymous sources we have never heard from. That one just blows my mind.

If the shoe were on the other foot, if Democrats were in the minority and Republicans were in the majority, if I were the ranking member on the minority side and we had a Republican President who nominated somebody for office and the chairman of our committee asked me as the ranking minority member to meet with someone whom the Republican President had nominated, I would meet with them in a heartbeat. I would want to hear that person's story. That is what I would want to hear.

If the anonymous sources were talking just to us, I would encourage them to talk to the other side as well.

By the way, the one person we did talk to—and we got this person, Mr. Rhew—I think we got his name out of a statement given by Senator GRASSLEY on the floor. We talked to him. He set the record straight. He set the record straight. I have already cited that in my comments. But we have never had the chance to talk to any other, I think, half a dozen or so sources.

The other thing I would say is that there is nothing inappropriate about the staff of a committee chairman inquiring of an OIG about the pace and the resources provided to conduct an investigation. This is just not any Department that has lacked Senate-confirmed leadership from us; this is the Department of Homeland Security. Americans have a lot riding on that Department doing their job well. They need senior leadership, and they have not had the kind they need.

But despite the repeated efforts to get the OIG to expedite their efforts, begun in September 2012—a joint letter from Dr. COBURN and me to the OIG in July of this year; 2 months later, get a response that, oh, maybe we will have something in October. Two months later, it is December, and bipartisan staff—Democratic, Republican; majority, minority—have a chance to be briefed by the OIG, and rather than say, well, this investigation we started 15 months ago is done, is ready to wrap up, they say, a couple more months, maybe 2 or 3 more months.

Are we supposed to continue to wait? We have the leadership we need at the Department of Homeland Security. At some point you just say: Enough already.

What we have learned is that in terms of full-time people working on this—I think there are about 650 full-time equivalent people at the Office of Inspector General at DHS, about 650, and as I understand it, 3 full-time people—1 investigator and 2 research assistants—have been devoted to this investigation. No wonder it is taking 15 months.

I would ask us to keep in mind our failure—our failure—to act on the recommendations made to Congress for reforms in the EB-5 program to address national security concerns and to address concerns about fraud.

Mr. Mayorkas did the right thing. He and his staff pulled together a long list of changes they need, legislative changes they need so they would be authorized to address his concern. We dropped the ball. We did not include those changes when we reauthorized the EB-5 program for 3 more years—a straight reauthorization. We did not make any reforms. We did not make any changes despite the fact that he had suggested them months before we acted.

Finally, those changes ended up in the immigration bill. We passed it here. Most Democrats voted for it, some Republicans. It is over in the House. It is languishing and not moving. If we are really concerned about giving this agency, CIS, the tools they need, the authority they need to address these security concerns, fraud concerns, why don't we join Senator LEAHY in the legislation he is going to introduce that largely is taken from the immigration reform bill? When he introduces it, let's cosponsor that bill.

Finally, if we are going to accept as gospel criticism about the way a person has run a particular agency—and not of a criminal nature but criticisms about the way it has been run—why not give that person a chance to defend himself? Why not give him a chance to say: Well, there is another side to this story or maybe there is not, but at least give him that opportunity.

Lastly, the morale at the Department of Homeland Security—they do some great work, important work, the Department of Homeland Security. And they do a lot better work. I will mention a couple things, if I can.

Remember the response of FEMA, which is part of the Department of Homeland Security? Remember their response to Katrina? It was deplorable. How about the response of FEMA to Hurricane Sandy? All around—for the most part, all around kudos were won.

How about TSA? TSA has been a whipping boy for a lot of folks. All of us who have the opportunity to fly commercially, we have seen TSA make changes. They have taken criticism they have taken to heart. Among other things, they have created the Trusted Traveler Program so a lot of people do not have to take off their shoes or their belts or do all kinds of things to get through a security check. The TSA has done a number of things. Some of the technology they are using is not intrusive, as it was before. Security is actually strong.

For 10 years, our friends at GAO, the Government Accountability Office, have, every 2 years, on their high-risk list at the beginning of every Congress, cited that the Department of Homeland Security needs to be able to earn a clean financial audit of its books. They said: 10 years; that is enough time.

Well, it turns out the Department of Defense, which has been around for, gosh, about 70 years—over 60 years—is still not auditable. The Department of Defense is not auditable, much less to have a clean audit.

Last week the Department of Homeland Security, for the first time in their existence, received a clean financial audit. They did it in 10 years. DOD, also a big operation—it is 60 years and counting, and they are not even audited yet.

So for those who want to constantly criticize the Department of Homeland Security, I would just say that the people who work there work hard. They have tough jobs. They need our help. One of the things they need our help in doing is securing the kind of leadership they have not had, and that is Senate-confirmed leadership.

We have had some very good people who have been acting as the Secretary, acting as the Deputy Secretary, but, friends, it is not the same. They need leadership that is going to be there with not just the blessing of the President but the blessing of this body and that is going to be there today, tomorrow, next month, next year, and provide the leadership that is needed.

The most important element I have ever seen in my time in the Navy—23 years Active and Reserve—my time as Governor, my time here in the Senate, the most important element I have ever seen in any organization to determine whether it is going to be successful is leadership. Show me a school with a great principal, I will show you a school that is on the way up. I do not care how ineffective the teachers might be, I will show you a school that is on its way up. Show me a business with a strong leader, and the same thing is true. Show me a body like this or a military unit, leadership is always the key. And it is the key at the Department of Homeland Security.

If the improvement that I have noted, that I mentioned here just a minute ago, is to continue and actually be strengthened, they need Senate-confirmed leadership. We will have the opportunity in a couple of hours to give Jeh Johnson, the newly confirmed Secretary of Homeland Security, a key player in the leadership team that he is trying to build at that Department. He deserves our support, and so do the people at that Department. And if they get it, they will provide the support we need in this country to be safer in the days ahead.

With that, Madam President, I thank you for allowing me to give this statement.

I see my friend from Kansas on the floor. I thank him for his patience, and I am happy to yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

HONORING OUR ARMED FORCES

FALLEN FORT RILEY SOLDIERS

Mr. MORAN. Madam President, CWO2 Joshua B. Silverman, age 35, Scottsdale, AZ; SGT Peter C. Bohler, age 29, Willow Spring, NC; SPC Terry K.D. Gordon, age 22, Shubuta, MS; SFC Omar W. Forde, age 28, Marietta, GA; CWO2 Randy L. Billings, age 34, Heavener, OK; SSG Jesse L. Williams, age 30, Elkhart, IN are names of soldiers who lost their lives this past week. They lost their lives in a helicopter incident in Afghanistan, and five of those soldiers were from my home State based at Fort Riley, KS—the Big Red One.

Our Nation is forever indebted to these young men for their service and their sacrifice. This evening I ask the Senate to pay tribute to these six soldiers who, in serving their country, lost their lives. If we here in Washington, DC, need a reminder about our responsibilities, we need only look to our service men and women who, for no partisan reason—nothing to do with Republicans or Democrats—volunteer to serve their country, and recognize there are things much more important than even life itself.

These soldiers were committed to preserving the freedoms and liberties guaranteed Americans by our Constitution, and they sacrificed their lives every day to make certain Americans have the opportunity to pursue the American dream.

I once heard a hymn that has stayed with me ever since the first time I heard it. It was sung at the funeral service of President Reagan. It is called “Mansions of the Lord.” It was performed by the U.S. Armed Forces Chorus at the National Cathedral here in Washington. The words of that hymn are these:

To fallen soldiers let us sing
Where no rockets fly nor bullets wing
Our broken brothers let us bring
To the mansions of the Lord
No more bleeding, no more fight
No prayers pleading through the night
Just divine embrace, eternal light
In the mansions of the Lord
Where no mothers cry and no children weep
We will stand and guard though the angels sleep
Through the ages safely keep
The mansions of the Lord

We honor these six soldiers who this week were welcomed into the mansions of the Lord.

I am grateful for the blessings these brave men afforded us with their service to our country, and we thank God for giving us these heroes. We remain committed to preserving this Nation for the sake of the next generation by honoring that sacrifice.

We Americans are indebted to every member of our military. We are indebted to do nothing less than to preserving America's freedom and to make certain it remains the bright shining star for the world.

I would ask God to bless these service men and women, to bless our veterans, to bless our country.

This coming week, in a few short days, families will gather around dining room tables across our Nation to celebrate the holidays. In the instance of these six families, there will be an empty chair at the Christmas table. For those of us who are Christians, we celebrate Christmas as the arrival of the Prince of Peace, and I would ask that we have peace in our land, peace in our world, and no more wars. And I would ask that these families find peace knowing that their son, their husband, their father, sacrificed for something more important than life itself—they sacrificed for others. May they find peace in knowing what worthy lives their loved ones lived.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Madam President, there has been considerable controversy in recent days over a provision in the recently passed spending package that became known as the Bipartisan Budget Act which cuts pensions for military members, including wounded warriors.

There was bipartisan agreement. People on both sides of the aisle believe that it ought to be fixed, that it was an error and should not go forward, and that there were better ways to find the money—if you have to have money to spend somewhere else—than taking it from military retirees.

But Majority Leader REID and every single Member of his conference save one stood together to block an effort which I proposed to restore the pensions for the military and also find better offsets. They blocked us from making any alteration to this spending package that was before the Senate, including my amendment to close an egregious tax welfare loophole—a tax credit, a payment directly from the United States of America to illegal aliens—that could pay for these cuts itself. Indeed, the inspector general of President Obama's Treasury Department has said this loophole needs to be closed and would save a substantial sum of money. It is an open gate, allowing massive fraud and illegality.

So we simply wanted to close that loophole. We asked to pay for this new spending by closing this loophole that the Treasury Department asked us to close instead of reducing the retirement benefits by as much as $70,000 for a sergeant who served to age 42 in the U.S. military.

How can this blockade be defended? How did it happen? Why would we be in such a position? Is there any Member in the majority who would really defend the practice we are now undertaking where legislation that clearly needs an amendment to fix a problem in it is not allowed to have amendments, and the legislation is rammed through the Senate?

This has been the pattern around here for far too long. The majority leader is eroding the Senate's historic role as the great Chamber where the issues are debated and changes and amendments are voted on, and he is being enabled and supported by his conference.

Consistently, time and again, when objections are made to try to stop this practice and get amendments and votes on important bills, his conference has stood with him. In other words, his conference is saying: We choose to stand with Majority Leader REID and his procedural actions which block other colleagues; we choose to stand against even our own Members having amendments and against the right of individual Americans to have their Senator be held accountable—to stand up and be able to offer amendments to legislation to improve it. And if you don't do that, you are accountable for voting for the final bill—which is imperfect and should be fixed.

That is the way the voters hold us accountable. They need to be able to see us vote and look at our voting records and decide whether we are serving their interests, some Wall Street interest, some special interest, or some political group instead of the national interest. That is what this whole system is about.

Now we have before us the Defense bill that is so important for America. I serve on the Armed Services Committee. I have been on that committee for nearly 17 years. We moved this bill out with a big majority. I voted for it in committee, although I expressed great concern about its budgetary problems that needed to be fixed. Unfortunately these problems have not been fixed. But I wanted to see the bill move forward, and I tried to be cooperative.

The bill moved to the floor. The budget problem hasn't been fixed, and there are other problems with the legislation that need to be refined. The bill before us, the Defense bill, spends approximately $500 billion—for the largest single agency in the U.S. Government. Are we to accept that it should pass in this body without a single person having a single idea that ought to be made a part of that bill? Can it not be made better?

The majority admits it is not a perfect piece of legislation. We certainly know that. The American system is designed so that when an imperfect bill moves forward, a Senator can offer an amendment. Maybe it is not a good amendment. Maybe it will be voted down. Maybe it is a good amendment and will be accepted. But no more, not with what is happening here today.

What is happening here today is when Republicans want to offer an amendment, Senator REID basically says no. He doesn't want any amendments. He then uses a device called "filling the tree"—because he gets to be recognized first—filling it with a series of amendments, leaving no place, then, for any other Member of the Senate to call up an amendment. And the majority leader won't remove the amendments from the tree unless he decides he wants to.

On this Defense bill, we had two votes on amendments when the bill was up for an entire week. We could have easily had 30 or 40 votes that week had we chosen to do so. So only two votes were held, and none now, and we are moving to final passage. The tree is filled, and we have not been able to force even a single vote to fix matters.

Senator CORNYN offered an amendment this afternoon. He filed a motion to table some of the amendments Senator REID had placed on the tree, and it was voted down by the supporters of Senator REID on the other side of the aisle. We have been talking about this for a long time. This is contrary to the history of the Senate.

Senator CORNYN laid out how year after year for 51 years we moved a defense bill through the Senate, and there have been multiple amendments nearly every time but this one. It is unthinkable that the great Senate of the United States would not allow amendments to a bill as significant as a defense bill.

So what does the majority leader do after he fills the tree? Republicans said: Wait a minute, Senator REID. There were no amendments allowed on the bill. We have amendments.

He said: Oh, you are being obstructionist. I am going to file for cloture. I am going to file a motion to shut off debate, and we are not going to have any amendments.

And then if the Republicans resist and say, we are not going to vote to end debate because we haven't had any amendments, he says, you are obstructionist.

This is the pattern that has been going on. He files cloture virtually immediately with the filing of the bill, and he claims that is a filibuster by the Republicans. So by filing cloture immediately, he contends that Republicans are filibustering a bill; he counts up these filibusters and says: There are too many filibusters in the Senate. You are obstructing the business of the Senate. In truth, Majority Leader REID is the one who is obstructing the Senate. He is the one who is blocking debate and amendments.

If you ask a schoolchild somewhere in America, if you ask a senior citizen, a World War II veteran who loves this country and has studied the great principles of America, you say there is a piece of legislation on the floor of the Senate and there is something in it that is wrong—they want to cut benefits for wounded warriors, veterans who served and have been wounded in combat and disabled—and you do not want that to happen, what would you do?

Why, they would all answer, you would file an amendment to the bill to fix this problem.

But not in the Senate today. That is the classical understanding of the way this body ought to operate. That is what James Madison, I am sure, conceived and the way it has worked for so many years. But not any longer. This bipartisan Budget Act is just like the Defense bill—no amendments. No matter how important the bill is, no matter how many problems there are in it, no amendments.

Oh, you want to go back to that old Senate where people could actually debate and have amendments and offer changes and improve it? No longer. That is obstructionist. That is delaying tactics. We won't have it anymore. You are slowing us down. It is unacceptable.

When I vote not to end debate on this Defense bill that is before us, I am not voting to not have a defense bill. That is so obviously wrong it is hard to believe you have to explain it. But we are not voting to do that. We are voting to maintain the classical principle of the Senate where individual Senators from whatever State there is can come to the floor and make a contribution to the country. They were elected by their people. There are almost 5 million Alabamians who elected me. Do I not get to offer an amendment to the Defense bill of the United States? It diminishes my role. It diminishes the role of every single Senator. So I am asking my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who have been lemming-like, I call it, defending this abuse of power, to begin to consider what this may mean to them and whether this is the right way the Senate should operate.

There will be some tough votes. We will all have to take tough votes. Probably most people can explain their votes if they know what they are doing. Maybe some cannot and they will be voted out and sent home. So be it. If you cannot defend your vote and you are not casting good votes on bills and you cannot respond effectively as to why you voted for or against a certain amendment, then you ought to be sent home. We are not entitled to these jobs. We have to be elected to them.

I am concerned about it. I believe it goes even beyond the significance of this important Defense bill. I think it goes beyond this grave error in which we are reducing the pay of military retirees when we are not reducing other retirees' pay.

This is not a belt-tightening across the board. It seems to me to be a targeting of one group of Americans, perhaps those who served more than any other group.

Majority Leader REID continues to complain that the trains are not running on time, not running with enough ruthless efficiency to suit his ideas. So he then uses a filling-the-tree tactic. But that is not all. Although President Obama has had judge after judge after judge confirmed, and Cabinet people and sub-Cabinet people confirmed in large numbers, the Senate refused to approve one appointment recently and refused to fill three Federal judgeships at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit because they were not needed. The average caseload for those judges was 149. Of the 8 judges who are there now, there are authorized 11 judges. So the 8 judges there now have 149 cases per judge, whereas my circuit, the 11th Circuit, sitting in Atlanta, has over 700 cases per judge. The national average is around 350 cases per judge.

We do not need to fill three judgeships for which the caseload is not there. The caseload for the D.C. Circuit is almost half that of the next lowest circuit in the country. So we do not need these judges. The caseload continues to decline. So the Senate refused to give cloture, refused to confirm those judges. So in an act of pique or calculation or deliberateness, the majority leader altered the rule of the Senate about how we ought to conduct business here. He did so by breaking the rules of the Senate.

This is what happened. U.S. Senate rule XXII says in order to bring debate to a close, three-fifths of the Senators duly sworn would need to vote to end the debate. There were not sufficient votes to end the debate on the DC judges because they were not needed. This irritated the majority leader. So he petitioned to the Presiding Officer and the Parliamentarian and he asserted that it only takes 51 Senators to vote to end debate. But rule XXII explicitly says it takes three-fifths, 60 Senators, to end debate. It goes on to say, except when you change the rules of the Senate, and that takes two-thirds, 67. So it takes 67 votes to change the rules of the Senate and 60 votes to end debate.

What did Senator REID do? He asked the Parliamentarian to say it only took 51. The Presiding Officer, the President pro tempore of the Senate, Senator LEAHY, our longest serving Member, and the Parliamentarian said no, Senator REID, the rule is it takes 60 votes to shut off debate.

So what did Senator REID do? He used the ability to appeal the ruling of the Chair and he asked his colleagues to overrule the ruling of the Chair, which by any plain reading of the rules of the Senate would be without dispute requiring 60 votes to shut off debate, but he wanted it to be 51 and his colleagues supported him. His colleagues supported him, they supported him and he overruled the Chair, his own Parliamentarian whom he selected and the Presiding Officer that he put in the Chair. They voted to change the rules of the Senate. It is in plain language—with 51 votes, not 67.

This is dangerous, colleagues. This is the kind of thing you see in Third World republics or would-be republics. This is the kind of lawlessness that will endanger the American system of government at its most fundamental basis. It is endangering us. The President says whatever he wants to—you can keep your doctor, the President says your plan is going to save you $2,000 a year, the President says all these things and he gets his bill passed and none of it is true.

I don't see any Members on the floor who voted for this bill, ObamaCare, down here apologizing to the American people, saying I am sorry, the bill I voted for did not do any of the things I promised you it would do and I am willing to have an amendment process on the floor to fix it. No, we are not going to get a vote on ObamaCare. They are going to block that too. If any attempt is ever made, he will fill the tree and block that vote. So we are not able to bring it to the Senate floor and require Senators to vote on serious issues involving health care for millions of Americans because Senator REID doesn't believe in it and he is backed by his colleagues.

I guess the President probably says, oh, don't let them vote on ObamaCare, they might change some of it. You know, they are finding out what is in it. We don't want them to actually think they have enough muscle to actually pass a law to fix it or change it or alter it. That would be terrible. Who do they think they are? Do they think this is a democracy or something?

That is where we are. This is huge and significant. We have to confront what is happening. It is very important that we cool down and we get some sort of work going on, but I am not confident at all on that. This effort should result in a retreat from this breaking the rules to change the rules, this nuclear option.

The reason a nuclear option was called that is because once you do that, it blows up the entire Senate. Senator LEVIN explained the problem very succinctly, one of two Democrats who voted against Senator REID's attempt to execute the nuclear option and to change the rules of the Senate. He said if a majority can change the rules of the Senate, there are no rules. It is simply what the majority says. There are no standards, there are no rules, there are no procedures. If we can change them whenever we are frustrated by a majority vote in the Senate, there are no rules, there are no protections. That is so true.

That is why what has happened here is so significant. I believe this late-night work and this process to consider nominations is healthy, because it requires us to go through a painful period of introspection as to what is happening to us and how we ought to conduct this great Senate.

This afternoon we did not have the support for Senator CORNYN's resolution. Yesterday, when I made the motion to clear a place off of the tree so my amendment could be heard and voted on, my colleagues, a majority of them, voted no. Only one broke with Senator REID, actually; one Democrat did. Every Republican voted to allow amendments to go forward, allow my amendment to be heard. The rights of all the Senators in this body to defend their State, to defend equal representation, was undermined.

The two Independents in our Senate, delightful individuals for sure who caucus with the Democrats and vote with the Democrats, maybe sometime they will be willing to prove that the letter "I", independent, means something and maybe they will help us stand and defend the heritage of the Senate. We need to make this thing change. We cannot continue to aggregate more and more power into the majority leader where no longer—where the right to demand 60 votes to shut off debate could be further eroded, where we will continue to see bill after bill brought up with no amendments being allowed.

They say oh, well, we are at the end of a year. We must do that. We do not have time. But the Defense bill has been on the floor since June. That is awful. There have been huge amounts of time for us to bring it to the floor. It has been out of committee since June and it should long ago have been brought up and, in fact, it could have been voted on last week with full amendments and we would already be through with that and be gone today.

The Armed Services bill, the Defense bill is an important bill. I am very disappointed we are at a period of impasse, very disappointed that I cannot support going forward with it to final passage because there is no ability to amend it and fix some of the obvious flaws that are in it. It is outside the budget spending limits we agreed to.

The Bipartisan Budget Act was also rammed through the Senate with no ability to offer amendments. This legislation will not allow us to prevent the cut of veterans retirement pay and disabled wounded warriors retirement and benefit pay.

It is a disappointment for me to be in this position. I have tried to be supportive of the Defense bill every year. I worked in committee to do so. I believe last year we got a unanimous vote, Republicans and Democrats, quite a number of times in the committee. A lot of that is due to Senator LEVIN and Senator INHOFE's leadership. This time we have a problem, and it is not going well, and I am deeply disappointed. I believe we can do better, we must do better, and I will not be able to vote to support this bill tonight.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the efforts and concerns of my colleagues in the Senate and the House who are unwavering in their support for our military retirees. We need to correct this grave injustice that was made and continue our promise to the men and women who serve our Nation by restoring their retirement benefits. We need to cut spending and put our country on the path to fiscal responsibility, but it should not come at the expense of our nation's military retirees. I could never support a budget deal that contained this provision. That is why I opposed the deal that was approved by the Senate this week. I will work with my colleagues to make sure our servicemembers receive the benefits they earned. I am confident that we can find a solution to this error before any retirees are impacted by a reduction in their future retirement pay.

Ms. HEITKAMP. Mr. President, I rise today with strong concerns over how the National Defense Authorization Act of 2014, H.R. 3304, approaches the critical issue of intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance, ISR, and specifically the approach to the Global Hawk system. I support H.R. 3304, but I will continue to work with administration officials, our Nation's military leaders, and my colleagues to make sure our Nation makes the right investments in ISR that protect our Nation and our servicemembers.

Since I joined the Senate in January 2013, I have spoken with several key Department of Defense leaders who have emphasized the importance of sufficient ISR capabilities to keep our troops safe and protect U.S. interests. The Global Hawk family of platforms plays a key role in providing that ISR capability and answering the call of combatant commanders with unmatched range, endurance, and cost-per-ISR-hour.

The Fiscal Year 2013 National Defense Authorization Act prohibited the retirement of the Global Hawk through the end of the Fiscal Year and directed the Air Force to maintain the operational capability of each system to support operational requirements of the combatant commands. The original House version of the Fiscal Year 2014 NDAA extended this retirement prohibition on Global Hawk through the end of 2016. This smart provision would allow the still-fielding Global Hawk fleet to continue to support operations around the globe and allow Congress and the Department to gather additional information about our Nation's future ISR needs. Such information would allow the best possible decision about the Global Hawk.

Unfortunately, H.R. 3304 only extends the prohibition on Global Hawk retirement through the end of Fiscal Year 2014. This decision could allow DOD to follow through on previous efforts to prematurely cancel the Block 30 version of the Global Hawk, which represents the largest group of Global Hawk platforms. DOD's own findings show that the Block 30 Global Hawk represents a more efficient platform for high-altitude ISR needs than platforms which perform the same missions, such as the U-2.

It doesn't seem wise to allow the potential termination of the largest part of the Global Hawk program before Congress fully understand the capabilities and abilities of this system and how it can fit into larger DOD plans.

I strongly support many of the provisions in H.R. 3304, such as its improvement in how the military approaches its sexual assault epidemic, and amendments I worked on to protect our ICBM forces and ensure our Nation moves forward in an effective way regarding unmanned aerial system integration in the national air space and the use of Reserve component units for cyber missions. However, I will continue to work with my colleagues to improve the DOD's approach to ISR and ensure our military retains the ISR it needs to keep our citizens and servicemembers safe.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am so pleased that the National Defense Authorization Act includes important reforms to article 32 of the Uniform Code of Military Justice, UCMJ, which are based on an amendment I authored with Senator GRAHAM.

I thank Senator GRAHAM for working with me on this issue. I also thank Chairman LEVIN and Ranking Member INHOFE for working so closely with us. Without their support, these critical reforms would not have been incorporated into this bill.

These reforms will help end the abusive and invasive questioning of sexual assault victims during pretrial article 32 proceedings.

Article 32 proceedings are the military's equivalent of preliminary hearings in the civilian criminal justice system. However, article 32 proceedings have become their own trials where the defense counsel can harass and intimidate sexual assault victims and ask questions that would never be permitted in civilian courts. No victim should ever have to endure this type of abuse.

Our military justice system should encourage sexual assault victims to report these crimes and pursue justice by prosecuting perpetrators. Tragically, the article 32 process does just the opposite.

Roger Canaff—a former prosecutor who has worked with the military as a legal consultant on sexual assault cases—says that article 32 proceedings are so difficult for victims that “a lot of cases die there as a result.” In fact, the military's own statistics show that nearly 30 percent of sexual assault victims who originally agree to help prosecute their alleged offenders change their minds before trial.

The National Defense Authorization Act addresses this serious problem by bringing article 32 proceedings more in line with how preliminary hearings are conducted in the civilian criminal justice system.

Specifically, the bill limits the scope of article 32 proceedings to the question of probable cause. This will help ensure that article 32 proceedings do not turn into fishing expeditions that serve only to discredit and humiliate victims.

It also requires article 32 proceedings to be presided over by an impartial military lawyer except in extraordinary circumstances.

In addition, the bill requires all article 32 proceedings to be recorded—putting in place a uniform standard across all of the services. It also gives victims access to the recording.

Furthermore, it prevents victims from being forced to testify in article 32 proceedings. Instead, alternative forms of testimony, including sworn statements, could be used. This will ensure that victims are not revictimized during article 32 proceedings.

These commonsense reforms will help ensure that victims of sexual assault are not put on trial simply for making the courageous decision to pursue justice. And this change has broad support from survivors, military leaders and military law experts.

Karalen Morthole—who was raped by a master sergeant at a bar on the grounds of the Marine barracks in Washington, DC—supports reforming the article 32 process: “People always say, ‘This is why so many people don't come forward.’ I agree. The process should be changed so survivors of rape feel confident rather than discouraged when trying to pursue justice.”

MG Vaughn Ary—the staff judge advocate to the commandant of the Marine Corps—agrees that “there is room for change in article 32.”

In addition, Eugene Fidell—a professor of military justice at Yale Law School and a former Coast Guard judge advocate—has said that article 32 proceedings have “become bloated” and “should be replaced by a simple probable cause hearing.”

I am so pleased that there is a clear consensus on the need to reform the article 32 process to better protect victims of sexual assault. This is an important step forward in addressing the epidemic of sexual assault in our military.

But let me be clear. There is only one fundamental change that will give sexual assault survivors the confidence to report these heinous crimes knowing that justice will be served—the bipartisan Military Justice Improvement Act.

I am deeply disappointed that this important bill was not included in the National Defense Authorization Act because until vicious crimes like sexual assault are handled outside the chain of command, we will not have truly fixed our broken military justice system.

That is why I look forward to proudly casting my vote in support of Senator GILLIBRAND's bill in January, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the compromise Fiscal Year 2014 National Defense Authorization Act is an important authorization bill that I intend to support. This will be the second legislative matter considered by the Senate this week that reflects the kind of compromise too often missing from our deliberations in Congress. It does not meet the needs of every Senator, but it marks a step in the right direction and will allow the Department of Defense to move forward key programs in the coming year.

I understand the frustration of some Senators who were keen to offer amendments to this authorization bill. In fact, two measures I introduced during the Senate's consideration were not included in the compromise. These provisions would have extended protections for human rights by aiding international efforts to prosecute war criminals and compensating innocent civilians who fall victim to combat operations. Both provisions have significant support, and I remain committed to continuing to work to see them enacted in the new year. But despite the best efforts of Chairman LEVIN and Ranking Member INHOFE, the amendment process in the Senate was derailed by irrelevant proposals, which prevented provisions like these from receiving consideration. Nonetheless, I will support this compromise.

The bill before the Senate authorizes the activities of the Department of Defense, the single largest U.S. Government entity. As a result, manufacturers and service providers across the United States will keep Americans employed making and doing things for the Department. It means that the U.S. Armed Forces can take the steps needed to address threats to our security. Most importantly, it means the members of the Armed Forces and their families can count on having the equipment and support they need while selflessly serving to keep us safe.

The Defense authorization bill before us also contains important changes that will help the administration transfer more individuals out of the detention facility at Guantanamo Bay. It includes a provision that relaxes the current onerous certification requirements that must be satisfied before transferring detainees to third countries. These requirements have proven to be unnecessary and counterproductive.

Regrettably, the compromise bill retains two limitations that were included in the House-passed version of the authorization. The legislation extends the current prohibition on constructing facilities in the United States to house Guantanamo detainees and also extends the ban on transferring detainees to the United States for detention or trial. I strongly believe that the executive branch must have all options available in handling terrorism cases, particularly the ability to prosecute terrorists in Federal criminal courts. That is why I voted against an amendment by Senator AYOTTE during the Senate floor debate in November that included these same restrictions.

Although I would have preferred the more favorable detention-related provisions contained in the underlying Senate bill, this compromise represents an improvement over existing law.

Reforms to the military justice system in this compromise also accomplish an improvement of the status quo. This bill includes roughly two dozen changes to the Uniform Code of Military Justice and Department of Defense policy that enhance victims' rights and protections and amend the investigative and prosecutorial process. Among the measures included in the bill is the removal of a commander's ability to overturn jury convictions, and a secondary review of any decision made not to prosecute, whether made by the convening authority or the staff judge advocate. Additionally, the 5-year statute of limitations on trial by court-martial for additional offenses involving sex-related crimes is eliminated, and those accused of certain sex-related offenses are required to receive dishonorable discharges or dismissals if convicted.

These important accountability measures will be supported by the removal of the "good soldier" defense for the accused, and victims will further be protected by changes that prevent them from being forced to testify at article 32 proceedings and at trial. Though more can be done, these and other provisions adopted represent a significant improvement and merit the Senate's support.

There are many other provisions in this bill that are worthy of highlighting, but as cochair of the Senate National Guard Caucus, I am most pleased that this bill does not compromise on supporting the National Guard. As an essential part of U.S. security at home and abroad, the National Guard is an integral part of the Armed Forces today and will remain so in the future. Among the many provisions that demonstrate the strong commitment to the National Guard felt by Members of Congress in both Chambers, two are most important. First, the authorization effectively ends the process of "off-ramping," wherein a National Guard unit scheduled to deploy is replaced at the last minute by an Active unit, preserving both certainty and operational readiness for our National Guard personnel and families.

Second, it requires congressional budget justification documents to specifically enumerate funding levels for embedded mental health providers in National Guard and Reserve units. For too many years, men and women in the Guard and Reserves have come home from war to inadequate mental health resources. The Congress took the important step of embedding mental health providers in units, but resources disproportionately moved towards the large, Active military bases, while our hometown heroes at small drill centers around the country went without. With specific enumeration, we can take a better look at resource allocation and we in the Congress can make sure members of the Guard and Reserve get similar access to their Active counterparts.

The authorization before the Senate is the result of compromise. The Senate will close this session of Congress on the heels of two bipartisan votes that passed a 2-year budget and this important authorization bill. I hope that this bodes well for further cooperation and compromise in the new year.

Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Mr. President, I support the compromise National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2014 (NDAA). Though this bill has shortcomings, it will be good for our country and for Connecticut, and it will allow us to keep faith with the brave men and women who serve and sacrifice each day in our military.

As a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, I have the privilege and the important responsibility to honor our men and women in uniform by providing for them while they are training, when they are deployed, and if they are wounded. I voted for the NDAA in committee this year, and I will vote for it on the Senate floor because I know that it will support our servicemembers throughout their time in uniform and beyond. This bill funds the training and equipment our troops need to go into battle. It funds the critical weapons systems that they need to protect our Nation. And it provides for them after they return home—albeit less robustly than it should—through medical care and opportunities to build skill sets for civilian careers.

This bill is good for Connecticut as it supports both our Connecticut National Guard and Reserve and our State's hard-working defense manufacturers. Specifically, it funds two submarines a year. The NDAA maintains robust funding for the Ohio Replacement Program, the Virginia Class Submarine, the Heavy Lift Replacement Helicopter Program, and the Joint Strike Fighter. It funds advanced procurement for the Army's UH-60 Blackhawk M Model that will be used by the Connecticut National Guard, and it rightly does not authorize a costly and unnecessary round of base realignments and closures.

The NDAA will strengthen our commitment to eliminating the scourge of sexual assault from our military. It includes provisions from my bill to provide victims of an offense under the Uniform Code of Military Justice with the same rights to counsel and other protection afforded victims in civilian courts. It rightly eliminates the ability of a commander to dismiss a court martial or reduce a sentence, and it establishes minimum sentencing guidelines in cases of sexual assault. The bill also strengthens rights for victims of sexual assault at pretrial article 32 proceedings and ensures that they will have counsel present when interviewed.

I have been very concerned with properly providing for those wounded warriors who suffer the so-called signature wounds of these recent wars: post-traumatic stress and traumatic brain injury. Just this year, I was saddened by the loss of Connecticut veterans who fought long battles with these illnesses. Though I believe that more efforts are needed, the NDAA will help to provide improved outreach on suicide prevention to Reservists in Connecticut and across the country to hopefully reach additional wounded warriors in need of help.

I have also been very concerned with the lack of interoperability between Department of Defense and VA medical records. Right now, when someone separates from the military, the VA has no complete, automatic access to veterans' service-related medical records, even though the Department of Defense has those records. Defects in interoperability have contributed to the unconscionable backlog of veterans' claims. I have worked with Senator NELSON on a bill to mandate interoperable medical records between the Department of Defense and the VA, and I am pleased that provisions on this subject are in the NDAA. These provisions require the SecDef and the Secretary of VA to ensure the Departments' electronic health record systems are interoperable with integrated display of data, or a single electronic health record, and that each is compliant with national standards.

Additionally, I am pleased that the NDAA includes provision-enhancing mechanisms to correlate skills and training for military occupational specialties with skills and training required for civilian certifications and licenses or IT credentialing. By prioritizing training and certification, not only do we ensure that our military personnel have the appropriate skills to carry out their duties, but we also ensure that our veterans have a path to translate these skills to civilian life and find work that fits their skills once they leave the service.

Finally, this bill strengthens our commitment to ensuring that we do not contract with the enemy. It includes provisions I championed giving combatant commanders greater authority to terminate or void a contract with anyone supporting our enemies, and it prohibits funding to enter into contracts with Rosoboronexport—a Russian company financing Assad's cruel war against the Syrian people.

Overall, I am pleased to support this bill to keep our country safe and our military strong. I look forward to voting for this bill and to continuing to work with my colleagues in a bipartisan manner to support our national defense.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise to call, as so many others have done, for justice. The scourge of sexual assault still pervades in our military. Our outrage is palpable, but change is possible.

I recently read a heart wrenching story in the Baltimore Sun about Brian Lewis. Thirteen years ago, after 3 years of service in the Navy, Brian was assaulted by a higher ranking shipmate. His attacker went unpunished, while Brian bore shame, depression, and even accusations from his fellow shipmates.

Brian is not alone. He joins thousands of men and women who have suffered silently at the hands of a fellow soldier, sailor, or marine. This is a compelling national problem. When you join the military and you face the enemy, you shouldn't have to fear the enemy within.

Victims of sexual assault have long been redlined and sidelined at the hands of a justice system that fails to be objective or effective. It is time to put a stop to this now.

Despite lasting trauma, prejudice, and overwhelming obstacles, these men and women have endured. Their courage in the face of suffering is admirable, but it should not be necessary.

That is why I support the new Defense bill for fiscal year 2014. It includes over 30 provisions to address sexual assault. It strengthens the justice system. It provides counsel and support for victims. Most importantly, it provides a serious deterrent for those who dare take advantage of our most patriotic Americans.

For 25 years, I have fought to resolve this issue. I thank those who have stood beside me, including, most recently a bipartisan alliance of women Senators. We have made some progress, but we still have far to go.

There are 26,000 reasons why we rise today. Twenty-six thousand sexual assaults have occurred in our U.S. military this year. Many of these acts of violence are unreported, unprosecuted, and unpunished. We cannot let this continue, not on our watch.

It is our moral duty to speak for the voiceless, to vouch for the powerless, to fight for the helpless. The men and women of our military may know how to wage war, but they should have to battle through redtape when it comes to their pursuit of justice.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2014. I commend the work of my colleagues on the Armed Services Committee, especially the chairman, Senator LEVIN, on reaching an agreement with the House to complete this important legislation. For 51 consecutive years, the Senate has passed a defense authorization bill, and I hope we will be able to soon send the bill before us to President Obama for his signature. We owe it to our servicemembers to pass a law that will support them and enable the DOD to execute this year's budget efficiently and effectively.

We made tough decisions in putting together this bill—especially in these difficult economic times. But this bill will allow DOD to combat current threats, plan for future threats, and provide for the welfare of our brave servicemembers. While it is disappointing that we did not have sufficient time to debate amendments, this is a good compromise bill and it is critical that we pass it.

I would like to point out a few of the highlights of this bill:

It authorizes a 1-percent across-the-board pay raise and reauthorizes over 30 types of bonuses and special pays for our men and women in uniform; includes 36 key provisions to strengthen sexual assault prevention and response programs; extends authorities to continue several "train and equip" programs to assist foreign militaries in counterterrorism and counternarcotics missions; and authorizes $6.2 billion for the Afghanistan Security Forces Fund to further build the capacity of the Afghan army and police so those forces can take over security throughout Afghanistan by December 2014.

This year I once again had the honor of serving as the chairman of the Seapower Subcommittee, alongside Senator MCCAIN, the ranking member. Working together, our subcommittee focused on the needs of the Navy, Marine Corps, and strategic mobility forces. We put particular emphasis on supporting marine and naval forces engaged in combat operations, improving efficiencies, and applying the savings to higher priority programs. Specifically, the bill includes the required funding for two Virginia-class submarines and provides an additional $100 million to support buying the 10th DDG-51 under the current multiyear procurement program. The bill also approves the funding for other major programs, including the DDG-1000 destroyer, the Aircraft Carrier Replacement Program, the Littoral Combat Ship, LCS, and the P-8 maritime patrol aircraft. I am particularly pleased about the funding for the Virginia-class submarines and the DDG-1000, which so many Rhode Islanders help to build.

Working together with Senator McCAIN, this bill increases accountability for taxpayers' dollars spent on several major Navy programs. For example, the bill includes language to increase the CVN-78 cost cap, while excluding certain urgent and unforeseen testing costs from that cap. In addition, we require quarterly reports on the program manager's estimate for CVN-79, and we freeze the payment of fees whenever the program manager's estimate of total program costs exceeds the cost cap.

In this bill, we also require the CNO to submit a report identifying the current littoral combat ship, LCS, concept of operations and the expected survivability of each sea frame; we require the GAO to review the LCS program; and we limit future procurements of the LCS until the Navy produces certain reports and the Joint Requirements Oversight Council makes certain certifications about the LCS program.

The bill also amends the language of the annual 30-year shipbuilding report to require the disclosure of ship prices assumed in the plan and a risk assessment whenever the number of ships in the plan falls below the Navy's requirements.

I offer my thanks to Senator McCAIN and the other members of the Seapower Subcommittee for their diligence in the subcommittee's work this year.

We have a good bill before the Senate, and I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

FIRST SESSION OF THE 113TH CONGRESS REFLECTIONS

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, as the first session of the 113th Congress comes to a close, it is appropriate to reflect on some of the accomplishments of the year, while acknowledging that so much more could have been done had Republicans in both the Senate and the House cooperated. We have passed some commonsense, good-government legislation. As chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, I am proud of the work of the Senate Judiciary Committee this year. While there remains much work to be done, these accomplishments illustrate what we as a Congress are capable of when we set aside partisan politics and put the good of the American people first.

My first legislative priority at the beginning of this Congress was to complete our work to improve and reinvigorate the Violence Against Women Act, VAWA. Vermont has been a national leader in addressing domestic and sexual violence. In Vermont, VAWA funding has helped the National Network Against Domestic and Sexual Violence provide services for more than 7,000 adults and nearly 1,400 children in 2011 alone. The Burlington-based Women Helping Battered Women and Middlebury-based WomenSafe have supported thousands of children and adults by offering emergency shelter, transitional housing, counseling, and legal assistance. These dedicated service providers help victims recover from unspeakable trauma and abuse, but the need for VAWA remains. Three women are killed every day by abusive husbands or boyfriends. In Vermont, 51 percent of all homicides are related to domestic violence. After months of work, the Senate came together in the best tradition of the institution to reauthorize VAWA with a strong bipartisan vote. This bill, which I drafted with Senator MIKE CRAPO, a conservative Republican from Idaho, proved that when we put people before politics there is much we can accomplish. Our bill was written with the input of survivors and the advocates who work with them every day, law enforcement personnel, judges, and State and local leaders. It was drafted to meet the real needs of real victims. Although it faced early resistance, none of the commonsense changes it included should have been controversial. Eventually, the House listened to the experts in the field and followed the Senate's example and passed this inclusive, lifesaving legislation. At a time when we face gridlock and stonewalling on even the most compelling issues, I was heartened to see that we could find a way to cut through all of that to help victims of violence.

I am proud of this new law. As a result of its passage, for the first time, VAWA guarantees that all victims can receive needed services, regardless of their sexual orientation or gender identity. The Leahy-Crapo Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act strengthens protections for vulnerable immigrant victims. It ensures that colleges and universities will do more to protect students from domestic and sexual violence. Our reauthorization also took important new steps to combat the appalling epidemic of domestic violence on tribal lands and to ensure that no perpetrators of this terrible crime are above the law. I was happy to work with Representative TOM COLE, a Republican from Oklahoma, to preserve this provision in our bill. I thank him for his leadership.

To help support the important work of Vermont's domestic and sexual violence advocates, I included all-State minimum funding allocations in the VAWA reauthorization, and amended the definition of rural State to ensure that Vermont continues to be eligible for grants under the Rural Grant Program, despite the increased population in Chittenden County. So far in 2013, Vermont has received $4.5 million in VAWA grants for victim services and violence prevention.

The bill that the President signed also included the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act, TVPRA, which strengthens effective programs to help us take on the scourge of human trafficking, both here at home and around the world. It is unacceptable that 150 years after the Emancipation Proclamation, the evils of sex trafficking and labor trafficking, forms of modern-day slavery, still exist. It has been needlessly difficult, but I am glad that the Senate adopted my amendment to add the Trafficking Victims Protection Act to our Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act to address the horrors of human trafficking.

My work across party lines did not end with passage of VAWA and TVPRA. It continued on a number of other smaller, yet nonetheless important, pieces of legislation.

As chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee and the Appropriations Committee's Subcommittee on State Department and Foreign Operations, I worked with Senators SHAHEEN and MCCAIN to obtain a continuation of the Iraqi Special Immigrant Visa, SIV, Program, H.R. 3233. Congress created the program in 2008 to afford some of the tens of thousands of Iraqis who served alongside U.S. troops the opportunity to seek safety and a new beginning in the United States. It was set to expire at the end of October despite the fact that after 5 years fewer than 6,000 of the 25,000 available visas had been distributed to those Iraqis who risked their lives to be our translators and our guides. They were a critical resource to our troops, helping them navigate complex cultural, political, and geographic terrain. Letting the program expire would have meant leaving many well-deserving Iraqi allies in danger and undermining American credibility for decades to come.

Although our initial efforts this fall to include the extension in the continuing resolution were blocked, we were able to work together to honor our commitment and renew this critical program by passing bipartisan legislation at the final hour. Among the many lessons of the Vietnam War is that we must not abandon those who risked their lives to help us.

Over the summer, I also worked with Representatives KLINE and MILLER on the House Education and Workforce Committee, and with Ranking Member GRASSLEY to pass the Missing Children's Assistance Reauthorization Act of 2013, H.R. 3092. This important measure ensures that the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, NCMEC, can continue its critical and lifesaving work on behalf of some of the most vulnerable children in our communities. Congress has now renewed its obligation to support vital efforts to locate missing children and to protect all children from being victimized by predators.

The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children was first launched nearly three decades ago. In that time, NCMEC has helped law enforcement in the recovery of more than 188,000 missing children through the use of a 24-hour hotline, a national child pornography tipline, and a cyber tipline, as well as the circulation of millions of photographs used to help track and identify missing children. The bill passed by Congress in September extends the program another five years.

The U.S. Parole Commission is an important public safety entity responsible for granting or denying parole for Federal and District of Columbia prisoners sentenced before parole was abolished. It also has jurisdiction over more recent DC offenders who are on supervised release from prison. The Commission's charter was set to expire in October, and what should have been a straightforward and noncontroversial extension, turned into a drawn-out struggle to override the objections of a single Republican Senator. Those objections meant that passage was only secured on the eve of the Commission's expiration, unnecessarily placing public safety at risk.

The objection was particularly troubling given that Congress has consistently recognized the importance of the Commission, reauthorizing it on six prior occasions. Beginning in August, I worked closely with members of the House Judiciary Committee to find bipartisan, bicameral agreement. They understood the urgency and consequences of inaction and passed the U.S. Parole Commission Extension Act of 2013 in September, H.R. 3190. Unfortunately, that same sense of urgency was not felt in the Senate and opposition delayed passage until the final deadline. Although reason ultimately prevailed, unnecessary partisan opposition cost us time and threatened public safety. It is not the way to legislate.

I also worked to clear a straightforward extension of the Supreme Court Police's authority to protect Justices, their staff, and official guests when they are away from Supreme Court grounds, H.R. 2922. I worked with my counterparts in the House for months to move this extension. Last month, the House voted by an overwhelming majority of 399 to 3 to pass this bipartisan bill, which extends this important authority through 2019. Congress has provided this authority since the 1980s to ensure the continued safety of our Supreme Court Justices and their employees. Threats to the safety of Supreme Court Justices are a threat to our democracy. In light of recent attacks on Justices off the grounds of the Supreme Court, it was all the more imperative that we pass this extension without delay.

Most recently, I worked with Senators MORAN and KING to move forward the Veterinary Medicine Mobility Act. This legislation, which will enable veterinarians to cross State lines to treat animals, particularly livestock, when the need arises, will dramatically improve the ability of veterinarians to do their jobs effectively. I have heard from many Vermonters about just how important this legislation is to them. The bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and in my role as chairman, I moved to discharge it from committee so that it could progress to the full Senate as quickly as possible. I am optimistic that it will pass the full Senate yet this year.

Unfortunately, the passage and enactment of bipartisan legislation has become more the exception than the rule. If this unprecedented obstruction continues, we will end up passing 46 percent fewer laws than we did last year. That is 46 percent less progress made for the American people and the Nation. It is therefore not surprising that the American public holds the Congress in such low esteem.

As the elected representatives of the American people, we bear a special responsibility to find ways to work together to find real solutions to our Nation's problems. Yet Congress is gripped by the paralysis of partisan politics. We are not the first Congress to face a divided government where Republicans control one House and Democrats the other. For example, during the 99th Congress, when the Republicans controlled the Senate and the Democrats the House, Congress passed 687 bills, which were enacted into law. It is disappointing how our progress pales in comparison. To match that level of productivity this Congress, we would have to pass over 600 bills next year. If we stay on track, we will have accomplished 81 percent less legislatively than the divided 99th Congress. To be clear, we have passed into law 19 percent of what the 99th Congress was able to pass. That is not a shining record of accomplishment, and we can and should do better.

It is my hope that both parties can set aside petty politics and get down to business for the American people. We do not agree on everything, but just as the Senate found common ground earlier this year on historic legislation to reform our broken immigration system, we must find a way to work together. The status quo is unacceptable and serves a small and extreme minority, not the common interests of a majority of Americans. Let's make the sacrifices and compromises necessary to push forward legislation that improves our economy and the lives of our constituents.

Look no further for such an opportunity than the Border Security, Economic Opportunity, and Immigration Modernization Act, a bill a bipartisan group of Senators supported and that the House has failed to consider.

This comprehensive bill contains measures that are important to many Vermonters and to the Nation. I added a provision that takes an important step toward restoring privacy rights to millions of people who live near the northern border by injecting some oversight into the decisionmaking process for operating Federal checkpoints and entering private land without a warrant far from the border. The bill contains significant measures to assist dairy farmers and other Vermont growers who have long relied on foreign workers and who will need them in the future. It contains a youth jobs program proposed by Senator SANDERS to help young people gain employment. It contains a measure I proposed to make sure that no Canadian citizen traveling to Vermont to see a family member will be charged a fee for crossing our shared border. It contains an improvement to the visas used by non-profit arts organizations like the Vermont Symphony Orchestra who invite talented foreign artists to perform in America. It contains measures to improve the lives and futures of refugees and asylum seekers who call Vermont home. It contains improvements to the H-2B Program to help small businesses. And it contains a measure to ensure that the job-creating EB-5 Program will be made permanent so that the State of Vermont can continue the great work that is being done with it to improve Vermont communities. This is a bill that will help Vermont families and businesses alike.

The immigration reform legislation was cosponsored by four Senate Republicans and marked the first time in 7 years that the Senate was able to pass a bipartisan comprehensive immigration reform bill. There are some provisions in this bill I am not comfortable with, and there are provisions that I believe are noticeably absent. However, we came together as a Chamber to pass the best possible bill in the spirit of compromise and an effort to make lasting, positive change. Unfortunately that progress was stalled by the House Republican leadership, which has inexplicably vowed not to allow a vote on the Senate's bipartisan legislation.

When the Speaker of the House says as he did last week that the Senate should pass more bills, I respond by challenging the leadership of the House of Representatives to take up bipartisan Senate-passed bills. The list of such bills that have been stalled by the obstructionism of House Republicans continues to grow.

Senator GRASSLEY and I worked hard as chair and ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee to draft a bipartisan bill to protect whistleblowers. This legislation, which is identical to our legislation from last Congress, will provide important protections to employees who come forward and disclose to law enforcement price fixing and other criminal antitrust behavior that harm consumers. This legislation is a continuation of the long partnership that I have had with Senator GRASSLEY on whistleblower issues.

Congress should encourage employees with information about criminal antitrust activity, such as price fixing, to report that information by offering meaningful protection to those who blow the whistle rather than leaving them vulnerable to reprisals. Throughout our history, whistleblowers have been instrumental in alerting the public, Congress, and law enforcement to wrongdoing in a variety of areas. These individuals take risks in stepping forward, and many times their actions result in important reforms and have even saved lives.

The legislation is based on recommendations from the Government Accountability Office, which interviewed key stakeholders in the antitrust community and found widespread support for antiretaliation protection in criminal antitrust cases. The provisions in this bill are modeled on the whistleblower protections that Senator GRASSLEY and I authored as part of the Sarbanes-Oxley Act and are narrowly tailored to ensure that whistleblowers are not provided with an economic incentive to bring forth false claims.

Antitrust laws protect consumers and serve to promote our free enterprise system. Our bipartisan bill will help to ensure that criminal violations of these laws do not go unreported. I urge the House to act quickly to pass this important bipartisan legislation.

Last month, the Senate passed the bipartisan Employment Non-Discrimination Act of 2013. That vote was 20 years in the making, and it was long overdue for Congress to extend these protections to all American workers. Years from now we will look back on this remedy as another historic milestone on our Nation's path toward more perfect union—a quest to realize more completely the motto engraved in Vermont marble above the Supreme Court building that declares "Equal Justice Under Law."

All Americans deserve civil rights protections under our Constitution, which, in addition to the First Amendment, also ensure due process and equal protection. In previous legislative debates like the one before us today, Congress has protected and bolstered these rights by passing legislation to fill gaps in our Federal laws. This includes passing legislation to protect the practice of religion without discrimination, to prevent pay discrimination based on sex, and to serve openly in the military. By passing the Employment Non-Discrimination Act, the Senate took another significant step forward in removing discrimination from our laws and ensuring the equal treatment of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender Americans. I urge the House to advance this remedy to injustice, which is already the law in 29 States.

Similarly, I urge all Senators to allow passage of several common sense bills that were reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee and which enjoy strong bipartisan support but remain stalled due to the ideological objections of one or two Senators.

For example, this is now the second time in two Congresses that the Judiciary Committee has reported the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act reauthorization with strong bipartisan support. In the 111th Congress, we held a hearing to examine a series of recommendations from the Government Accountability Office. I worked with Senator GRASSLEY to incorporate many of those recommendations into the reauthorization. Yet our progress is needlessly stalled.

Statistics show that the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Program has been saving lives for years. The Judiciary Committee most recently reported this legislation on a bipartisan vote in August, and it has since been approved by all Democratic Senators but remains stalled on the Republican side. Over 15 years ago, I worked with Senator Ben Nighthorse-Campbell to create this partnership to support State and local law enforcement jurisdictions in the purchase of lifesaving bulletproof vests. Since that time, over 13,000 jurisdictions have participated in this program and more than 1,084,081 vests have been distributed to law enforcement because of this partnership.

Last year, Chief Michael Schirling of the Burlington Police Department in Vermont testified before the Judiciary Committee on the importance of the bulletproof vest partnership to law enforcement in Vermont and across the country. This year alone, 31 Vermont jurisdictions received a total over $73,000 to aid in the procurement of 271 bulletproof vests. That is 271 more Vermont law enforcement officers who will have a better chance of survival if they are shot in the line of duty.

A few of my friends on the other side of the aisle argue that it is not the place or function of the Federal Government to spend Federal dollars on first responders in communities across the country. I urge them to put the safety of our most dedicated law enforcement officers and first responders over politics and ideology. Law enforcement officers risk their lives every day to ensure our safety, and I believe it is our duty to support them.

Based on data collected by the Department of Justice, in just 2012, bullet-proof vests saved the lives of at least 33 law enforcement officers in 20 States, which is an increase of almost 14 percent over 2011 levels.

The obstruction of this program's reauthorization should end. I hope those who are determined to continue their opposition will explain those objections to law enforcement officers across the country who put their lives at risk day in and day out. Congress has consistently pursued policies that support our State and local law enforcement officers and first responders. They are the frontlines of our national defense and indispensable to their communities. I urge all Senators to stand with America's law enforcement officers and support this legislation.

In April, the Judiciary Committee favorably reported bipartisan legislation that I authored with Republican Senator MIKE LEE to update ECPA and to bring this law fully into the digital age. Our bipartisan bill updates ECPA to require that the government obtain a search warrant—based upon probable cause—before obtaining the content of our emails and other electronic communications. The commonsense reforms in our bill carefully balance the interests and needs of consumers, the law enforcement community, and our Nation's thriving technology sector. The bill enjoys the support of a diverse coalition of more than 100 privacy, civil liberties, civil rights, and technology organizations from across the political spectrum, including the American-Civil Liberties Union, the Heritage Foundation, the Center for Democracy and Technology and Americans for Tax Reform. The bill is also the product of careful consultation with many Government and private sector stakeholders, including the Departments of Justice, Commerce, and State, local law enforcement, and members of the technology and privacy communities. I remain disappointed that a single Republican Senator has objected to the unanimous consent request to pass this bipartisan bill, which overwhelmingly passed the Judiciary Committee.

The privacy reforms in this bill are too important to delay. Like Senator LEE and me, all of the bill's supporters understand that protecting our digital privacy rights is not a democratic ideal, nor a Republican ideal, but an American ideal that all of us should embrace. I hope that all Senators will join me in supporting the Electronic Communications Privacy Act Amendments Act and that the Senate will pass this bill without delay.

Earlier this year, during consideration of legislation to prevent gun violence, the committee passed a bipartisan bill to help curb the straw purchasing of firearms and the interstate trafficking of firearms. Senator COL-LINS, who shares my goal of giving law enforcement officials better tools to combat the straw purchasing and firearms trafficking that puts guns into the hands of drug cartels and other criminals, joined me in this effort.

There is no doubt that straw purchasing and gun trafficking contributes significantly to the proliferation of guns in our communities across America and also across the southern border in Mexico. Under current law, there is no criminal statute specifically prohibiting straw purchasing. To convict criminals, prosecutors must rely on laws that prohibit an individual from making false statements in connection with the purchase of a firearm. The penalties for such "paperwork violations" are often too low or do not serve as effective tools for law enforcement to put criminals behind bars. My bill would have changed that.

This bill would have established a new Federal criminal offense for straw purchasing or conspiring to straw purchase a firearm from another person. My legislation would have also criminalized smuggling firearms out of the United States and also would strengthen existing law regarding the transfer of firearms to prohibited persons. This legislation was strongly supported by law enforcement groups from across the country. I was greatly disappointed when this legislation did not receive the votes to pass the Senate, including from a Senator who had voted in favor of it in the Committee. Despite the best efforts by Senator COLLINS and me to find consensus with stakeholders and senators, too few Republicans were willing to join our important effort to meaningfully combat the serious public safety risks that straw purchasing and firearms trafficking pose.

The committee also passed several bills to prevent gun violence and protect law enforcement officers, including Senator BOXER's bipartisan School and Campus Safety Enhancements Act of 2013, Senator FRANKEN's bipartisan Justice and Mental Health Collaboration, and Senator CARDIN's bipartisan National Blue Alert Act. Each of these bills was carefully crafted and enjoy bipartisan support. I urge the Senate to consider these important legislative proposals early in the next session.

In early November, the Judiciary Committee reported by an overwhelming bipartisan majority the Leahy-Cornyn Justice for All Reauthorization Act which would reauthorize legislation first passed in 2004, when the House and Senate had Republican majorities, and it was signed into law by President George W. Bush. The Justice for All Reauthorization Act strengthens and reauthorizes key programs to make the criminal justice system work better and more fairly. And it does so in a fiscally responsible way, reducing overall authorizations by nearly 25 percent. This is a strong example of what we can accomplish when we work together.

Whether it is on the complex issues of protecting victims of domestic violence or in crafting a comprehensive immigration reform bill, we have demonstrated that we can work across the aisle to develop and pass practical legislative solutions. Just recently, in fact, we saw similar progress made by Senator MURRAY and Congressman RYAN as they put aside their considerably different views to formulate a budget deal. Likewise, the House and Senate are in the process of conferring a farm bill that we hope will be satisfactory to all parties. I hope that we can continue this trend of bipartisan cooperation as we consider legislation in the coming year, as there are tremendously important bills to be considered.

For example, the Committee will continue its work on surveillance oversight and reform. For decades I have consistently fought to curtail the sweeping powers contained in the USA PATRIOT Act and FISA Amendments Act, while also bolstering privacy protections and strengthening oversight. With the recent revelations of sweeping government surveillance programs that threaten personal privacy and threaten the economic health of American technology companies, we are at a watershed moment in this important debate. That is why I joined with Congressman SENSENBRENNER in October to introduce the USA FREEDOM Act, a bill to end the dragnet collection of Americans' phone records and recalibrate the government's surveillance authorities. All three branches of government have now called into serious question the effectiveness of these authorities. I will continue pressing the administration to rein in these powers and work with Democrats and Republicans to pass the meaningful reforms that are in the USA FREEDOM Act.

Regarding the problem of patent trolls, we have significant work to do on several issues under the Judiciary Committee's jurisdiction. It is my hope that we will be able to work in a bipartisan way to address issues like abusive conduct by patent trolls who are targeting small businesses. I have heard from a growing number of main street businesses in Vermont and across the country that have received aggressive demand letters and been threatened with lawsuits when they are simply the innocent user of an allegedly infringing product. I have introduced bipartisan legislation with Senator LEE to tackle this problem, and I look forward to the Judiciary Committee's continued focus on this important issue next year.

In the wake of this past June's Supreme Court decision striking down the coverage formula for Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, I have been working with Congressman SENSENBRENNER and other House Democrats to introduce a bipartisan and bicameral response to the Court's ruling and to restore this vital protection to the Voting Rights Act, and will continue to push for this legislation next year.

Finally, I will remain focused on a number of important criminal justice issues, with sentencing reform legislation as a top priority. As a former prosecutor, I understand that criminals must be held accountable, and that long sentences are sometimes necessary to keep violent criminals off the street and deter those who would commit violent crime. I have come to believe, however, that mandatory minimum sentences do more harm than good. I chaired a hearing on reevaluating the effectiveness of federal mandatory minimum sentences on September 18, 2013, and have been working with both Democrats and Republicans on sentencing reform proposals.

In the coming year, I also plan to reintroduce my forensics reform bill, and will also take up the Second Chance Reauthorization Act, which I was proud to reintroduce earlier this year along with Senator PORTMAN. Since its enactment in 2008, the Second Chance Act has reduced prison costs and improved public safety by giving Federal, State, and local governments additional tools to help inmates more successfully reintegrate into their communities upon release and avoid re-offending. Offenders can escape the cycle of recidivism when they have the job training and skills necessary to successfully reenter society. So far in 2013, the Vermont Department of Corrections has received over $800,000 to implement a two-phase adult reentry demonstration program and a comprehensive statewide adult recidivism reeducation planning program. The reauthorization bill improves and consolidates the programs authorized by the Second Chance Act and reauthorizes the bill through 2018. The reauthorization bill improves and consolidates the programs authorized by the Second Chance Act, and reauthorizes the bill through 2018.

There are far too many young Vermonters who do not have a roof over their head each night. While organizations like the Spectrum Youth and Family Services and the Vermont Coalition for Runaway and Homeless Youth do their best to provide emergency shelter, services, and housing for youth who are homeless or marginally housed, the need far outweighs their capacity. Next year I plan to introduce legislation to reauthorize the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act, RHYA, which expired at the end of September. RHYA funds outreach services and helps provide shelter for children and young adults who find themselves homeless. I look forward to reauthorizing and improving vital RHYA grant programs to help children in our most vulnerable communities. This reauthorization will also bolster training and resources to ensure our grantees are well equipped to meet the needs of young victims.

In addition to our legislative work, the Judiciary Committee will also continue its work to consider judicial and executive nominations. During this past year, unfortunately, the same obstruction that plagued the Senate during the first-term of the Obama administration continued to delay the rate of confirmations to appointments on the Federal bench and the Executive Branch.

The 113th Congress began with a high level of vacancies on the Federal judiciary. As of January 2013, there were 77 vacancies in the Federal judiciary, and of these, the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts determined 27 to be "judicial emergencies." Over 2013, the number of vacancies steadily climbed to around 90. While we were able to confirm a total of 46 judicial nominees this year, including 11 circuit court and 31 district court nominees, we were unable to keep pace with new vacancies. By December of this year, there were a total of 88 judicial vacancies, 35 of which are judicial emergency vacancies. In stark contrast, at the end of the fifth year of the Bush administration, there were only 49 judicial vacancies, including 16 judicial emergency vacancies.

This year, the Senate voted to confirm two high-level nominees to key law enforcement positions at the U.S. Department of Justice: James Comey, Jr. to be the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; and B. Todd Jones to be the Director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms, and Explosives. It was unfortunate that the majority leader was required to file cloture on both of these nominations before we could get to a confirmation vote. In stark contrast with the treatment of previous FBI Director nominees, who were all confirmed by the full Senate within a day or two of being reported by the Judiciary Committee, James Comey is the first FBI Director nominee in Senate history to be filibustered. He was ultimately confirmed overwhelmingly by a vote of 93 to 1. Two days later, the Senate confirmed B. Todd Jones by a vote of 53 to 42, making him the first confirmed head of the ATF since that position became Senate-confirmable in 2006.

The consideration of nominations is one of the most important functions of the Judiciary Committee. I am hopeful that we will not see the same sort of obstructionism and dilatory tactics that we encountered during 2013.

In the coming year, we must redouble our efforts to work past our differences to find bipartisan, commonsense solutions to our Nation's problems; I know that that is what Vermonters expect of me. We have seen so far in this Congress an unprecedented level of grid-lock, partisanship, and political brinksmanship, which culminated in a costly and unnecessary Republican government shutdown in October. We can and must do better, and I hope that we can put the obstructionism of this past year behind us. The American people expect and deserve better. We owe it to our constituents to work together to pass commonsense bipartisan compromise legislation, and we have already seen that we can do just that. I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to build upon the progress we have made and find meaningful solutions to the many challenges we face as a country.

VERMONT'S GRANITE INDUSTRY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I would like to take a few moments to talk about a unique Vermont asset that recently gained national attention: the granite industry. Due largely to its versatility, high quality and immense quantity, granite proved integral to the early economic development of my home State and continues to play a vital role today.

The people of Barre, VT, have been mining granite since the 1800s, when it was learned that the unusually high quality of the stone found in the town's hillsides was in high demand. This discovery had local and global implications. Granite from the Rock of Ages quarry in Barre was supplied to help construct columns in the Vermont State House that still stand today. Additionally, the art of stone carving that the granite industry created attracted skilled immigrants to Vermont from throughout Europe and Canada. In fact, both my grandfathers were stone carvers in Vermont.

With its museum, tours, and even a sandblasting experience, the Rock of Ages quarry has expanded its offerings to serve as an educational and historical site, attracting visitors from around the world. Recently, the Timberland Boot Company visited the quarry for a photo shoot. They became so enamored by the community and its people that they ended up highlighting the area in a new line of footwear, noting that it was influenced by "a 150-year-old granite industry that transformed the tiny New England town into an international destination for commerce and art."

I am very proud of the people of Barre for embracing and preserving the important history and culture the granite industry brought to Vermont. The recognition that the Timberland Boot Company gave to Rock of Ages is well deserved.

I ask that an article printed in The Barre-Montpelier Times Argus on November 26, 2013, "Marketers find Barre history just the right fit," be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Barre-Montpelier Times Argus, Nov. 26, 2013]

MARKETERS FIND BARRE HISTORY JUST THE RIGHT FIT

If you don't think the local granite industry has a story still worth telling, try selling that to the folks at The Timberland Boot Co., who turned what was supposed to be a routine photo shoot at Rock of Ages last year into a multimedia campaign that is very Barre.

"It's pretty impressive," Rock of Ages spokeswoman Amanda Pittsley said of the newly launched digital campaign for Timberland's high-end heritage collection.

"Originally, they were just looking for a rugged place to go with their new line of boots," Pittsley recalled. "They were just hoping to use a panoramic of the top of the quarry as an intro to this 'mine' of products as far as their industrial boot."

The photo shoot a year ago turned Quarry Hill into boot hill for a day and a half.

"We literally spent all day carrying around boots," she recalled of Rock of Ages' attempt to accommodate a photographer and a creative director interested in making the most out of a texture-rich setting that includes everything from the frequently photographed quarry with its towering derricks to rough-cut granite blocks and weathered railroad tracks.

"They wanted different textures to show behind the boots," she said. "We were just going to be the granite backdrop."

Or so Pittsley thought until she recently visited <http://abington.timberland.com> and learned the photo shoot had "morphed into an entire product line" that makes up Timberland's latest Abington Collection—a nod to the company's first incarnation as The Abington Shoe Co.

"The Abington Fall '13 Collection was influenced by the people of Barre, Vt., and a 150 year old granite industry that transformed the tiny New England town into an international destination for commerce and art."

So says the slick website, which announces a product line that features several styles of boots and a shoe "designed with the Italian sculptor in mind."

The site features a collection of historic Barre photographs to go along with the marketing shots that were taken last year, a couple of timelines, and a few video cameos featuring Italian-born granite sculptor Giuliano Cecchinelli.

"Shop the collection that Barre inspired," it concludes.

Pittsley was impressed.

"You would have thought we went to them," she said.

According to Pittsley, it isn't unusual for Rock of Ages to field photo requests from fashion editors and companies like Lenovo interested in using the quarry as a backdrop, but the company rarely gets to see the end result.

"We're just a site," she said.

Pittsley said she never imagined the sort of spread Timberland came up with when the photographer and creative director headed into Barre to see what they might find at the Vermont Granite Museum and the Vermont History Center.

What they found, Pittsley surmised, was a story ready to be told.

"I think they were just overwhelmed with how much information there was," she said.

Though they can be purchased online, the boots said to be inspired by the people and the industry that put Barre on the map are available at only two Vermont locations, according to the website: Maven on Cherry Street in Burlington and Manchester Footwear on Main Street in Manchester.

DETROIT DIESEL

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, 2013 marks a significant milestone for a dynamic company based in Detroit, MI. It is the 75th anniversary of the founding of Detroit Diesel. Detroit enjoys a rich automotive heritage and has been a hub of innovation and manufacturing for generations. Many companies throughout the State have contributed to this impressive legacy. One of those companies is Detroit Diesel, and I am proud to recognize this innovative company here today.

Founded in 1938, Detroit Diesel has emerged as a leader in the heavy-truck engine industry and an important contributor to Michigan's economy. What began as a company focused on producing engines for the Allied Forces in World War II has expanded through the years to include an array of products used in a number of sectors. Detroit Diesel has a well-earned reputation for quality, has championed a number of technological breakthroughs in the manufacturing industry and is a committed community partner. These accomplishments are a tribute to the many hard-working people that make their success possible year after year. And I have witnessed firsthand some of the cutting edge technologies Detroit Diesel has pioneered.

Demand Performance is Detroit Diesel's hallmark, and they have achieved this in their product development and in the community. With a workforce of more than 2,000 in the city of Detroit, Detroit Diesel is a wonderful example of what is possible through cooperation and economic opportunities. This is evident in the announcement last fall of a $120 million capital investment by Detroit Diesel. This investment brings greater hope and new possibilities for the company and the city. It is also evident in their commitment to the community through their many charitable activities focused on helping families, protecting and improving the environment, and assisting various educational endeavors.

During its 75 years of existence, Detroit Diesel has made a significant contribution to Michigan's economy. As a lifelong Detroit resident, I am keenly aware of how business development helps to create and sustain jobs, to stabilize neighborhoods and to build the middle class. I commend Detroit Diesel for their entrepreneurial spirit and for their high quality products. I wish them the best as they continue to forge ahead, create jobs and innovate.

NATIONAL PEDIATRIC RESEARCH NETWORK ACT

Mr. WICKER. Mr. President, I wish to celebrate the passage of the National Pediatric Research Network Act, a bipartisan piece of legislation that was signed into law last month.

I wish to thank my colleague, Senator SHERROD BROWN, for his leadership on this issue. I was pleased to work with him on this important initiative in the previous two Congresses.

The National Pediatric Research Network Act expands and enhances our Nation's commitment to pediatric research by providing the infrastructure that is needed to advance the field for decades to come. To do so, the law includes training and support for early-career investigators and authorizes the National Institutes of Health to select a number of competitive pediatric research consortia. Each consortium, comprised of multiple institutions, will focus on specific, high-impact pediatric research, including basic, translational, and clinical investigations.

In addition, the law specifically states that a subset of the consortia must focus primarily on pediatric rare diseases. Participating institutions are encouraged to coordinate with multi-site clinical trials of pediatric patient populations. This will provide needed support for the families of children suffering from rare diseases, such as Duchenne muscular dystrophy, the most common fatal genetic disorder diagnosed in childhood, and spinal muscular atrophy, the leading genetic killer of children under the age of 2.

The National Pediatric Research Network Act's collaborative approach allows us to rethink and improve the way pediatric research is conducted. Shared resources among pediatric institutions help maximize the government's return on investment and avoid duplication. Rather than allocating additional funds at the taxpayers' expense, the law seeks to accelerate treatments for pediatric diseases by emphasizing collaboration and the efficient use of limited Federal resources.

I wish to thank the many families and organizations in Mississippi and across the country that helped build the bipartisan support necessary for passage of this bill, including Children's Healthcare of Mississippi, FightSMA, Parent Project Muscular Dystrophy, the Coalition for Pediatric Medical Research, Children's Hospital Association, National Organization for Rare Disorders, National Down Syndrome Society, the Federation of Pediatric Organizations, and the Kakkis EveryLife Foundation.

Simply put, this law will result in an improved and coordinated NIH pediatric research investment. This effort will help children across our Nation overcome numerous devastating diseases and conditions. I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure the timely and effective implementation of this law, and I will continue to fight for the health and well-being of our children.

REMEMBERING U.S. ARMY SPECIALIST DANIEL ECKSTEIN

Mrs. SHAHEEN. Mr. President, I rise with a heavy heart to memorialize the promising life and service of U.S. Army SPC Daniel Eckstein, who died on December 10 at the young age of 22. Specialist Eckstein was a member of the 3rd Special Forces Group, serving as an unmanned aerial vehicle mechanic at Fort Bragg in North Carolina.

Daniel was born in Lowell, MA on January 5, 1991, to Hans and Sharon (Green) Eckstein, and spent the first 6 years of his life there. In 1997, Daniel moved to Nashua, NH, where he remained for his formative years until his graduation from Nashua High School North as a member of the class of 2009. During high school, Daniel eagerly competed as a member of the Nashua North Titans baseball team. He was also a passionate New England Patriots and Boston sports fan.

Daniel enlisted in the Army in 2011, and following basic training he went on to successfully complete both Army Airborne School and the Warrior Leader Course. A testament to Daniel's drive for excellence as a soldier, he was awarded the Army Commendation Medal, the Army Achievement Medal, the Army Good Conduct Medal and the National Defense Service Medal.

Daniel loved his family, and was a proud father to his young son Brayden. It is my hope that during this extremely difficult time, Daniel's family and friends will find comfort in knowing that Americans everywhere appreciate deeply his vow to sacrifice his life in the defense of our country so that the rest of us may continue to live in peace and freedom.

Along with his parents Hans and Sharon, Daniel is survived by his wife, Kristina Eckstein, whom he married on January 9, 2011; his son, Brayden Daniel Eckstein; his sister, Amy Eckstein of North Carolina; his stepfather, Edward McLaughlin of Lowell, MA; his maternal grandmother, Barbara Green of Nashua; his grandparents, Peter and Elaine Beaton of Nashua; his father-in-law and mother-in-law, Michael and Darlene Burton and their daughter Summyr of Nashua; also aunts, uncles and cousins. This patriot will be missed by all.

I ask my colleagues and all Americans to join me in honoring the life and service of this brave young American, Daniel Eckstein.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

REMEMBERING WILLIAM SCRANTON

• Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, today I wish to remember and honor former Pennsylvania Governor William W. Scranton who passed away July 28, 2013. In both his public and his private life, Governor Scranton was always working to serve Pennsylvania and the Nation.

Bill Scranton was a descendent of colonists who came over on the Mayflower and his family founded Scranton, PA. He served in the Army Air Corps during World War II and was an assistant to Secretaries of State John Foster Dulles and Christian Herter during the Eisenhower administration.

In 1960, Bill was elected to Congress and was dubbed a "Kennedy Republican" for his support of the President's programs, including the Peace Corps, urban renewal projects and the minimum wage. He would only serve 2 years in the House of Representatives, before he was elected Governor of Pennsylvania in 1962.

As Governor, he signed into law legislation creating the State community college system, the State Board of Education, and the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency, PHEAA. During his four years in office, unemployment went down and wages went up. Limited to one term, he left elected office in 1967, but that did not end his public service.

Under President Nixon, Governor Scranton served as a special envoy to the Middle East and after the Kent State University shooting in Ohio in 1970, President Nixon again called on him to serve, appointing him the Chairman of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest. President Ford also reached out to Governor Scranton to serve, appointing him Ambassador to the United Nations where he prioritized human rights.

After leaving the United Nations, Bill Scranton retired. Throughout his life he was known as a man of integrity who said and did what he thought was right. In 2000, he received the Pennsylvania Historical and Museum Commission's Founders Award, which is given to a living person who represents the ideals of William Penn in individual rights, religious tolerance, representative government, public support of education, and free enterprise. Bill remained devoted to the city that bears his family name. He worked with various civic and charitable organizations and continued to advocate for economic development and job creation projects. His son, William W. Scranton III, followed him into public service as Lieutenant Governor of Pennsylvania from 1979 to 1987.

My thoughts are with his family and we thank him for his life of service to our Commonwealth and our country.●

REMEMBERING GEORGE M. LEADER

• Mr. CASEY. Mr. President, as this year ends, I wish to remember and honor George M. Leader, a former Governor of Pennsylvania, who passed away on May 9, 2013. Throughout his life, Governor Leader worked to give voice to the voiceless and protect some of the most vulnerable Pennsylvanians.

Governor Leader was raised on his parents' poultry farm and educated in a one room schoolhouse before going on to study philosophy, economics and political science at Gettysburg College. He served in the Navy during World War II and returned to open a chicken hatchery in York County, PA. He got his start in politics serving on the York County Democratic Committee then winning a seat vacated by his father to the State Senate. In 1954, he decided to run for Governor and won that election becoming, at age 37, the second youngest Governor in Pennsylvania.

While in office, Governor Leader enacted the Industrial Development Authority in 1956 which provided State financing in order to attract new and diverse industries. The program attracted 71 new businesses and created 12,000 new jobs within the first 30 months. Governor Leader also championed civil rights in all forms. He created the Fair Employment Practices Council to police employment discrimination, and fought for William and Daisy Meyers' family when they were threatened for moving into a white neighborhood. He required Pennsylvania schools to educate children with disabilities, which raised the enrollment by 250,000. He created the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry's Vocational Rehabilitation Center, which was the first facility in the country that provided rehabilitation and job training for people with disabilities. He also established the State Office of Aging and began the inspection of nursing homes.

Governor Leader left office in 1959, but that did not end his service to the people of Pennsylvania. He established Leader Health Care Organization and later Country Meadows and Providence Place Retirement Communities to provide high quality retirement services for our older citizens.

Hubert Humphrey once said that the moral test of government is how it treats those in the dawn of life, those in the twilight of life and those in the shadows of life. Governor Leader not only passed this test, he set a standard for other elected officials to follow. My thoughts are with the Leader family during this holiday season and we thank George Leader for his life of service to our Commonwealth and our country.●

MARIAN UNIVERSITY CYCLING TEAM

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. President, today, I wish to applaud the Marian University Knights on earning USA Cycling's No. 1 collegiate cycling team ranking for the 2012-2013 season, as well as winning the USA Cycling Collegiate Division I Track, Cyclo-cross, BMX, and road national championships during the 2012-2013 season.

Marian University established its cycling program in 1992. The program is committed to competing at the highest level and developing strong character in each team member through academic and athletic excellence. Since the inception of its competitive cycling program, the Marian University Knights have won 23 national championship titles in road, cyclo-cross, BMX, and track cycling.

Head coach Dean Peterson and his staff work tirelessly to promote the university's goals by bringing team-focused concepts to a sport that traditionally emphasizes the individual. The "Knights on Bikes" team includes both male and female student-athletes who travel together as a team during each season and to every national championship. In addition, Marian University has an indoor cycling center where even the coldest Midwest winter cannot prevent them from regularly training together.

The Marian University cycling team works to give back to the local and national cycling community as well as the Indianapolis area. Student-cyclists are required to contribute 10 hours each semester to community service. They work with the community in a variety of ways, including hosting informal riding clinics, cycling for charity, and participating in campus volunteer opportunities.

Congratulations to head coach Dean Peterson, assistant coach Nate Keck, athletic director Steve Downing, and all the student-cyclists on winning the USA Cycling Collegiate Division I road, track, and cyclo-cross national championships in 2012, and winning the road, track and cyclo-cross national championships again and for the first time the BMX national championship in 2013. In addition, congratulations to University president Daniel J. Elsener, executive vice president and provost Thomas J. Enneking, the Marian University student body, alumni, and friends. MARIAN UNIVERSITY FOOTBALL NATIONAL CHAMPIONSHIP

In 2012, the Knights made it to the championship game, where they won 30-27 victory in overtime.

REMEMBERING CHARLIE ROOS

● Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. President, today I wish to remember an extraordinary journalist and Coloradan, Charlie Roos. Charlie was a journalist and editorialist for some 60 years at the Denver Post and the Rocky Mountain News. He was a man of exceptional character, strong opinions and great wit—in short, he was a true Westerner. His writing was fair and objective, and he sought to hold all public officials accountable, no matter their political affiliations. This made his politics difficult to pigeonhole; he favored good governance and public service over partisanship.

Charlie grew up in Hiawatha, KS, and served our country during World War II. Following the war he went to Kansas University and graduated with Phi Beta Kappa honors. In 1946, his beloved wife Liza and daughter Mary moved with him to Denver where Charlie began his journalism career with the Denver Post. After many years covering State and national politics for the Post, he moved to the Rocky Mountain News where he remained until its closing in 2009. At the Rocky, Charlie served multiple roles including as a Washington, D.C., correspondent, political editor and weekly columnist. He continued to write about local and national politics on a personal blog until his death on August 27 of this year.

He is survived by a daughter, Mary Roos Catton; sons, Billy and Bob Roos; grandchildren, Jane Johnson, Megan Feltes, Jasmine Hartman and Charlie Roos; and great grandchildren, Jordan and Mason Johnson; Samantha, Kyle and Asher Hartman; and Joe and Naomi Roos.

Charlie was a loyal and devoted husband, father, grandfather, and great grandfather. He was also a dedicated journalist, with a passion for reporting and telling the truth to the people of Colorado. Charlie loved politics, and he believed in a higher standard for those who hold the public's trust. His writing was steeped in the history of Colorado and the Nation, which helped make his columns touchstones in our political dialogue. Like many in this country, he was disappointed in recent years at the vitriol and extremism that has crept into our debates. He bemoaned the decline of respectful opposition. Colorado lost a wise voice with the passing of Charlie Roos. Many, including myself, lost a mentor. But we should use his example to remind ourselves that the American people deserve the best that we can give. Our actions will always be measured against the high bar he set.

I ask that my colleagues join me in remembering Charlie Roos for his passion for reporting, his political wisdom and his dedication to Colorado. He will be missed.●

By Mr. HARKIN:

S. 1864. A bill to require a demonstration program on the accession as Air Force officers of candidates with auditory impairments; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, ensuring equal opportunities and equal rights for individuals with disabilities has been one of my highest priorities during my time in Congress. As the lead Senate sponsor of the Americans with Disabilities Act, I still remember the day that legislation was signed into law, July 26, 1990, as one of the proudest days of my legislative career.

The Americans with Disabilities Act is one of the landmark civil rights laws of the 20th century—a long overdue emancipation proclamation for Americans with disabilities. The ADA has played a huge role in making our country more accessible and more inclusive, in raising the expectations of people with disabilities about what they can hope to achieve at work and in life, and in inspiring Americans to view disability issues through the lens of equality and opportunity.

Before the ADA, life was very different for people with disabilities in Iowa and across the country. Being an American with a disability meant not being able to ride on a bus because there was no lift, not being able to attend a concert or ballgame because there was no accessible seating, and not being able to cross the street in a wheelchair because there were no curb cuts. In short, it meant not being able to work or participate in community life. Discrimination was both commonplace and accepted.

Since then, we have made amazing progress. The ADA literally transformed the American landscape by requiring that architectural and communications barriers be removed and replaced with accessible features such as ramps, lifts, curb cuts, widening doorways, and closed captioning. More importantly, the ADA gave millions of Americans the opportunity to participate in their communities.

The ADA stands for a simple, universal proposition—that disability is a natural part of the human experience and that all people with disabilities have a right to make choices, pursue meaningful careers, and participate fully in all aspects of society.

One of the four great goals of the ADA is to assure equality of opportunity. The opportunity for an individual to be judged based on his or her talents, skills, and abilities rather than stigmatizing labels; to be included with non-disabled peers; and ultimately, the opportunity to be successful. That is the minimum that any individual with a disability should expect, and it is our responsibility to make that happen.

More than two years ago I met Keith Nolan, a young man who is deaf and whose life goal is to be a military officer. Keith enrolled in and completed the first two levels of Army ROTC in California.

As a ROTC cadet Keith participated in all classes, labs, and physical training. He had interpreters provided by his school program for classes and training, but not for physical training which he did without an interpreter. Still, he participated fully in a Fall Field Training Exercise where the cadets spent a weekend working on tactics. He also earned a German Army Forces Badge for Military Proficiency becoming the only cadet in his squad to get the highest decoration. Overall, he excelled in the ROTC program.

However, Keith was not allowed to continue in ROTC due to Department of Defense rules that exclude individuals who are deaf or hard of hearing. Keith has a master's degree, and if not for Department of Defense rules excluding individuals who are deaf, would have qualified for Officer Candidate School.

My experience with Keith, as well as my long-standing advocacy to provide to persons with disabilities the same rights as every other American, have convinced me that individuals with disabilities can meaningfully contribute to our Armed Forces and should have the opportunity to do so.

I know that there is some hesitation among the service branches in having individuals who are deaf or hard of hearing serve in the active military. But I know, just as we have found under the ADA for the last 23 years, people with disabilities can accomplish great things if they are provided with the same opportunities the rest of us take for granted. Keith Nolan is one exceptional young man, the kind the military would be proud to have among its ranks and I bet there are probably a few other Keith Nolans out there eager to serve.

That is why today, on the day the Senate considers the National Defense Authorization Act, I am introducing legislation which would create a small demonstration program for 15–20 highly intelligent, deaf and hard of hearing men and women, in top physical condition, to enter the Air Force's Basic Officer Training course or the Commissioned Officer Training course at Maxwell AFB. The individuals who participate in this demonstration program will meet all the essential qualifications for accession as an officer in the Air Force—except for the one related to having a hearing impairment.

I had filed this legislation as an amendment to the Defense Authorization bill; unfortunately, because that amendment process was cut short, I was not able to have it considered. But I am filing this legislation today to make clear that I intend to press forward in this effort to create a demonstration program.

If this program is successful, as I believe it will be, then we will have created an opportunity for talented individuals like Keith Nolan in the military. We will have reiterated our commitment to equal opportunity for all Americans, including people with disabilities.

I hope my fellow Members will join me as cosponsors of this small, but important, demonstration program.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mr. REED (for himself, Mr. DURBIN, and Ms. WARREN):

S. 1873. A bill to provide for institutional risk-sharing in the Federal student loan programs; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, student loan debt continues to climb. According to an analysis by the Institute for College Access, average student loan debt has increased by 6 percent each year since 2008. In 2012, over 70 percent of college graduates had debt, owing an average of $29,400.

This is a growing drag on our economy.

In this summer's National Association of Realtors survey, 49 percent of the respondents identified student loan debt as a huge obstacle to home ownership—more than those who identified having enough money for a down payment or having enough confidence in their job security.

It is clear that the more than $1.2 trillion in outstanding student loan debt has serious implications for the broader economy.

We know that student loan borrowers are struggling. Default rates are on the rise. 13.4 percent of borrowers entering repayment in 2009 defaulted within three years. The rate jumped to 14.7 percent for borrowers entering repayment in 2010.

We cannot tackle the student loan debt crisis without States and institutions stepping up and taking greater responsibility for college costs and student borrowing.

States are critical partners in making college accessible and affordable. However, state support for higher education has declined in recent years, contributing to rising tuition costs at public colleges and universities. According to the latest State Higher Education Finance report published by the State Higher Education Executive Officers, state spending per full-time equivalent student reached its lowest point in 25 years in 2011.

In the Partnerships for Affordability and Student Success, PASS, Act that I am introducing today, we will re-establish a robust, Federal-State partnership for college affordability and student success. I long worked to fund the Leveraging Educational Assistance Partnership, LEAP, program, an initiative that engaged the states in matching federal funds to provide need-based grants to students. LEAP was modest in scale. The legislation I am introducing today calls for a more ambitious and comprehensive Federal-State partnership for higher education.

The PASS Act will authorize $1 billion for a State formula grant program. In order to participate, states must make a commitment to maintain their investment in higher education and must have a comprehensive plan for higher education with measurable goals for access, affordability, and student outcomes. At least 70 percent of the funding must be dedicated to need-based student financial aid. States also have the option of awarding grants to colleges and universities or partnerships between institutions of higher education and non-profit organizations to improve student outcomes, including enrollment, completion, and employment, and to develop innovative methods for reducing college costs. I am pleased to have the support of the National Association of State Student Grant and Aid Programs, the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities, and U.S. PIRG in advancing this legislation.

Institutions also have a critical role to play in curbing student loan debt. To ensure that institutions have more skin in the game, so they provide a better and more affordable education to students, which will in turn help put the brakes on rising student loan defaults, I am proud to be introducing the Protect Student Borrowers Act with Senators DURBIN and WARREN.

The Protect Student Borrowers Act will hold colleges and universities accountable for student loan default by requiring them to repay a percentage of defaulted loans. Only institutions that have 25 percent or more of their students borrow would be included in risk sharing based on their cohort default rate. Risk-sharing requirements would kick in when default rate exceeds 15 percent. As the institutional default rate rises, so too will the institution's risk-share payment.

The Protect Student Borrowers Act also provides incentives for institutions to take proactive steps to ease student loan debt burdens and reduce default rates. Colleges and universities can reduce or eliminate their payments if they implement a comprehensive student loan management plan. The Secretary may waive or reduce the payments for institutions whose mission is to serve low-income and minority students such as community colleges, Historically Black Institutions, or Hispanic-Serving Institutions, provided that they are making progress in their student loan management plans.

The risk-sharing payments will be invested in helping struggling borrowers, preventing future default and delinquency, and reducing shortfalls in the Pell Grant program.

With the stakes so high for students and taxpayers, it is only fair that institutions bear some of the risk in the student loan program.

We need to tackle student loan debt and college affordability from multiple angles. We need all stakeholders in the system to do their part. With the PASS Act and the Protect Student Borrowers Act, we are providing the resources and incentives for states and institutions to take more responsibility to address college affordability and student loan debt and improve student outcomes. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor these bills and look forward to working with them to include these and other key reforms in the upcoming reauthorization of the Higher Education Act.

By Mr. WYDEN (for himself and Mr. CRAPO):

S. 1875. A bill to provide for wildfire suppression operations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Wildfire Disaster Funding Act of 2013 to end the destructive cycle of underfunding wildfire prevention and then having to spend even greater amounts fighting wildfires than if our forests were properly managed.

For some time now, our country has witnessed tragic wildfire seasons that have put American lives and our treasured public lands in harm's way. Sadly, this year 19 firefighters lost their lives fighting the Yarnell Hill Fire in Arizona. Due to climate change, drought, and other factors, the risks from these infernos are likely to increase in the future.

Federal fire suppression spending has increased substantially over the past 20 years. In the case of the Forest Service, the proportion of their budget devoted to wildland fire management has increased steadily from 13 percent of the total budget in 1991 to 41 percent of the budget in 2013. Most recent fire seasons have cost upwards of $1 billion, compared to $200 million in the 1990's. This leads to an unfortunate new reality: our Forest Service is turning into the Fire Service.

In 8 of the past 10 years, the Forest Service has exceeded its budget for wildfire suppression, requiring the agency to conduct what is known as "fire borrowing" to cover wildfire suppression costs. "Fire robbery" would be a more accurate term because in many cases, the borrowed funds are never repaid. These transfers are incredibly disruptive and are undermining the core mission of the Forest Service.

What is worse, in order to fund the costs of fighting these infernos, the agencies responsible for fighting fires are underfunding the very programs designed to prevent fires. The 2013 President's Budget Request included significant cuts to hazardous fuels treatments for both the Department of the Interior, 50 percent cut, and the Forest Service, 30 percent cut.

Studies confirm that hazardous fuels treatments are effective at reducing fire risk and lowering costs. For example, a recent study published by Northern Arizona University's Ecological Restoration Institute concluded that treatments "... can reduce fire severity ...", and "... successfully reduce fire risk to communities."

It is clear that our Nation needs a new path forward on fire budgeting to make sure that there is adequate funding for fire prevention work. For much of 2013, I have been urging the Office of Management and Budget, OMB, to help the Congress develop a new path forward through oversight hearings, letters, and numerous discussions.

Therefore, today I am introducing the Wildfire Disaster Funding Act to provide a better path forward on wildfire funding and fire prevention.

This bill will establish parity for wildfire funding to how the Federal Government funds other major natural disasters such as floods and hurricanes. Specifically, the bill would move any spending above 70 percent of the 10-year rolling average for fire suppression outside of the agencies' baseline budget by making these additional costs eligible to be funded under a separate disaster account.

Based on Department of the Interior and Department of Agriculture analysis, 1 percent of wildland fires represent 30 percent of costs, so in essence my legislation would be moving the true emergency fire events to be funded under disaster programs, and the routine wildland firefighting costs—would be funded through the normal budgeting and appropriations process.

Most importantly, this legislation would free up as much as $412 million in discretionary funding to fund hazardous fuels projects and make sure urgently needed work is done in the forests to prevent wildland fires.

I am pleased to be joined by Senator CRAPO in introducing the bill today. This legislation also has the support of Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack and Secretary of the Interior Sally Jewell. I look forward to working towards enactment of the Wildfire Disaster Funding Act in the 113th Congress through any possible avenue. Together, the Congress and the Administration must work to guarantee that our country has the necessary tools to both combat and prevent wildland fires.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, we all have various people from other departments and agencies in our government on occasion who help us in our offices. Being a member of the Armed Services Committee, I have had the pleasure to have a number of fine defense fellows serve in my office and help us prepare the Defense bill and deal with other issues of importance.

Commander Joe Carrigan is another one of these very fine fellows. He is one of the best we have ever had. He has a good strategic mind, he works extremely hard, he is always thoughtful, and he is a delight to have in the office.

We have been talking about our military personnel and their retirement benefits. Remember, unlike other government employees, they are on call anytime, any day, to be sent anyplace in the world at the very risk to their lives and physical well-being. In addition, they work long hours. They have no thought to object to being asked to work a weekend or a night or 24 hours without sleep to do some task they are called upon to do, and they get no overtime for it. It is just the way it is done in the military because when a challenge is out there, they act.

I know some point out the weaknesses in this large entity, the Defense Department, and some of the management problems that arise. But I have to say without any doubt whatsoever that the institution has quality people—people of integrity, men and women who love their country and serve their country and do whatever you ask them to do. I see that every day when we work with people such as Commander Carrigan. And he will be successful in whatever he does and in whatever his next assignment will be.

So as we wrap up this Defense bill, I would like to thank him for his service and to thank all of our men and women in uniform who do their work, and I hope that we in the Congress can be worthy of their trust.

I yield the floor.

Mr. COATS. Mr. President, saner heads have prevailed. I think the news that we just received brought a much more reasonable way of moving forward rather than two more all-nighters with votes every 4 hours or so. It was not pleasing for anyone, particularly during the Christmas season. It was totally unnecessary to do this, had there not been some precipitating factors. I did not come down here to point fingers. There is frustration on both sides, frustrations on the Democratic side with Republicans—but I do not think it has been explained, what caused Republicans to become so concerned and so frustrated and frankly so angry over the way that the rules were broken to change the rules, something that has been precious to this body for its more than 200 years, and that is the uniqueness of the ability of a minority to have a say in legislation, to amend or at least to offer amendments. They may succeed, they may not succeed, but to have a voice.

I think those who have not served here in the past and have never been in the minority cannot begin to appreciate that right. I started in the House of Representatives where the majority rules. That is the way the Founding Fathers established that body. But they said they wanted the Senate to be different, a place where the passions could be cooled, where debate could be held, where amendments could be offered, where laws could be changed or modified. Members were given a 6-year term so they would not have the pressure of running for election in just months out or a year out; so they could step back and simply say let's look at the longer view, the larger view.

In my first time here in the Senate, that practice was led by the Democratic leaders and Republican leaders. The majority changed. I came here with a Democratic leader who was eminently fair to the minority and insisted, as did many Members, none more vividly and with emotion and commitment than did Robert Byrd, the Democrat from West Virginia, who probably knew more about procedures and the history of the Senate than all the other Senators combined. Read his volumes.

We would listen to Robert Byrd, respecting how he respected this institution. I experienced under Robert Byrd, then Republican Bob Dole, and then Tom Daschle, Democrat, Trent Lott, Republican—I experienced respect for the rights of the minority even though I was in the majority. They were sacrosanct. No one stood up and said let's take those rights away. Those who did were shot down by their own party. Our party made an attempt at that. Sense and reason prevailed. It was imposed by those who had been here, saying you need to understand the unique role of the Senate that has been created by our Founding Fathers, enshrined in the Constitution, 225 years of tradition and history.

To have the majority leader, the Senator from Nevada, come here and say we are taking that away, what we had promised to do; that is, keep the rules—we are going to break them and we are going to impose on you because you are dragging out the time it takes to secure nominations. We are going to impose on you. We are going to take away your minority rights and we are going to rule by majority.

As I said, I understand the frustration that must have been felt on the other side of the aisle when Members would delay the confirmation of nominees. Why were Republicans doing that? They were doing that because the majority leader was using a technique to deny us amendments on any number of bills.

Everyone here has constituent interests, their own interests. They come to the Senate, they want to move forward with an agenda. When you are in the minority you know that the chances of passing that are slim unless you get support from the other side. That is why we cosponsor with Democrats when we want to try to move something, to see if they can convince their Members to join us. That is the way this place has always worked.

But under the process of the so-called filling of the tree—I know people in the world say what in the world are you talking about, filling the tree? It is a procedural method which denies the minority the right to offer amendments. I do not have the statistics in front of me, but the majority leader has imposed that time after time. So the frustration just kept building here, day after day, week after week, month after month, year after year, of Members who said: I came to the Senate. I don't have a voice. I do not have the ability to even bring up my amendment.

What are we afraid of, taking a vote? If you cannot take a vote and go home and explain your vote to people, then you should not be here. You vote for what you believe in. You vote for what you think your State and your constituents who sent you here believe in. Some you win, some you lose, but at least you have the opportunity to make your case.

So, month after month, year after year, under the leadership of Senator REID, increasingly that right has been taken away. The frustration boils up from our feeling like—forget it. Forget 225 years of history. Forget how the Founding Fathers decided to structure this democratic function. Forget how past leaders, Republicans and Democrats, held this as sacrosanct, a right for the minority, the minority voice.

Here is the party that says we got elected by a majority and therefore the minority has no say. Those who have not served in the minority will not understand the denial of the right to express your view and have it put before this body for a vote. You can get up and talk about it but you cannot get it to a vote, so talk is cheap. Until they experience that, I am afraid, they will not have an understanding of how we need to get back to what this body was intended to be.

I want my colleagues who have imposed this in support of the majority leader's tactics of denying Members the ability to offer an amendment regardless of what it is for—I want my colleagues to understand that is where the frustration came from. And that is why we are trying to use whatever rules we have left to send the message that you are stifling us. You are denying us the very right that we worked so very hard to come to have here.

I am making a plea, I guess, that we sit down and have an adult conversation about how to make this place more efficient, how to make it more effective but do so in a way that allows the minority the right to participate in the process.

Going through the exercise we have gone through for the last few weeks with votes every 2 hours, sleeping on cots in our office or sleeping on the couch, coming down here in the middle of the night to vote—if we are talking about something serious for the country that needs that kind of debate, I am not saying we shouldn't do that. If it is a defense bill or a critical issue, such as a fiscal issue or a foreign policy issue, that is what this place is all about. If it takes us well into the night on something substantive like that, then we want to preserve that. But it is over the nomination of a district judge—and the statistics show that the majority party has virtually gotten every one they wanted.

Just recently the Republicans said that somehow we have to send a message that we are being shut out, and we were shut out by a majority vote of the Democratic Party which basically told Republicans: Forget the history. Forget the past. Sit down. You have no role.

I hope we can get back from that because it is so important for the future of this country to have a deliberative body that has the time and opportunity to debate, to offer amendments, and to fashion legislation in a bipartisan fashion. Maybe we have learned that lesson; maybe we haven't. There is a lot of rancor here right now.

I am glad we came to an agreement to have two votes at 11:15 this evening, and then we will move the process to six votes tomorrow morning, and then we will be able to go home and enjoy Christmas with our families.

I think the solution to this is not to throw daggers at each other but to sit down and think things through. Maybe we need to reach back to some of the writings of Robert Byrd. Maybe we need to reach back to some of the stirring words that were spoken by the majority telling their own Members: Don't go there. You are taking away the very essence of the U.S. Senate.

One of the Members on the Democratic side who has many years of experience here—many more than I—made that plea. Unfortunately, it wasn't listened to by Members in his caucus. I think if we could step back and we could look at the history of those in the majority doing everything they could to protect the rights of those in the minority, we would recognize that there is a better way to go forward than what we have done here.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. WHITEHOUSE. I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the quorum be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MANUFACTURING JOBS

Mr. COONS. Mr. President, I come to the floor once again to talk about manufacturing jobs. This week, under Senator AMY KLOBUCHAR's leadership, the Joint Economic Committee released a report that thoroughly and thoughtfully lays out why manufacturing jobs have such promise and how Congress can act to help spur manufacturing job creation now and into the future.

The report shows that today manufacturing jobs are high-quality jobs, that they pay better than jobs in any other sector in wages and benefits, and that they help create more local service sector jobs, that they contribute more to the local economy, and that manufacturers invest the most in private sector R&D of any sector in our country.

Manufacturing, as the Presiding Officer well knows, has long played an important role in our Nation's economy, has served as our economic backbone, and has built the American middle class. But over the past 60 years, manufacturing in our country has changed, gradually and then dramatically. As our economy and the world have changed, so has the nature of manufacturing and the playing field on which we can and must compete.

Due to global competition and the worst recession since the Great Depression, we lost 6 million manufacturing jobs in the United States in the first decade of this century. We are now on our way back, but we are well short of where we were in 2000. We have gained 550,000 manufacturing jobs over the last 3 years, and that gives me real hope. In just the last 6 months, we have seen new signals that our manufacturing sector continues to be on the rebound.

A new report from the Institute for Supply Management shows the U.S. manufacturing sector grew last month at its fastest pace in 2½ years, and hiring has reached an 18-month high. The value of our manufacturing exports has grown 38 percent in the last 4 years, and those exports now account for nearly 3 million jobs on American shores.

But, as the Presiding Officer and I well know and as many of our colleagues know, we need to invest more in that success and in that growth, in the private sector and in the public sector.

Overall, this is great news, about the slow, but real, steady recovery of our manufacturing sector. The reason we are coming back is the United States is actually poised to compete in advanced manufacturing, in the manufacturing economy of this century. In the 21st century, manufacturing is fundamentally different than it was in our past. Rather than repeating the same simple tasks over and over, workers must now carry out far more complex and varying tasks. They need to be critical thinkers and problem solvers. They have to do math and communicate with each other in writing and as a team and work in ways simply not expected 20 or 30 years ago. Crucially, they need to understand the entire manufacturing process in a way that wasn't necessary before. Yes, there are machines doing a lot of work, but we need workers who can oversee them and understand them to keep our steady, growing benefits to increase productivity.

Manufacturers can't rely on someone from outside our country to fix a problem every time there is one. Today they rely on their workers to troubleshoot on the fly. Our workers need to continue to be some of the most productive in the world and, to do that, they need to be more skilled than ever, particularly because they are overseeing highly complex operations.

The manufacturing floor today, as this report reminds us, is no longer the dirty, dingy, dangerous manufacturing workplace of 150 years ago. Today it is clean, high tech, highly productive, and it needs a highly skilled workforce. We can win by training our workers for these jobs.

While some nations engage in a race to the bottom on environmental labor and wage standards, this isn't the playing field we can or should try to win. Fortunately, we already have the tools to lead the way in manufacturing, in an innovation-centered economy.

This Joint Economic Committee report outlines how low-energy costs, due to greatly expanded natural gas supplies, a highly skilled workforce relative to much of the rest of the world, and having still the world's best universities, all in combination give us a real fighting chance. American manufacturing, I am convinced, is poised for a takeoff.

Now we have this report from the Joint Economic Committee which shows us just that. It shows why we should remain optimistic about American manufacturing, if we can simply in this body harness the will to act. This report frankly lays out a lot of why we have created Manufacturing Jobs for America.

Manufacturing Jobs for America is a campaign. It is a campaign to build support for good manufacturing legislation that Democrats and Republicans can agree on. So far, 26 Democratic Senators have come together to contribute 44 bills to a conversation; 31 of those bills have already been introduced in this body, and almost half of them have bipartisan cosponsors. We are actively seeking Republican cosponsors on the rest.

Our goal overall is to generate more and work more closely with Republicans to build consensus for bills that can pass the Senate, pass the House, and go to the White House to become law. We want to see manufacturing bills that can really help put Americans back to work.

I am grateful for the leadership of Senator DEBBIE STABENOW who, along with her cochair, Senator LINDSEY GRAHAM, led the bipartisan manufacturing caucus that is helping take great ideas and bills generated through this initiative and turn them into solid, bipartisan bills.

This Joint Economic Committee report emphasizes that there are four key areas where we have to focus to create manufacturing jobs now and in the future and they are exactly the areas that the Manufacturing Jobs for America initiative centers on as well.

First, we have to strengthen America's workforce. Second, we have to fight for a more level global playing field so we can open markets abroad and compete successfully. Third, we need to make it easier for manufacturers—especially new and small businesses—to access capital, to invest in research and development as well as new equipment and products. Fourth, we can and should do more to ensure a coordinated, all-of-government effort in supporting manufacturing by insisting on a stronger, clearer national manufacturing strategy. Together, across these four areas, the bills in Manufacturing Jobs for America can have a real and substantial impact if they become law.

I believe in the power of this initiative because I have seen the potential of manufacturing up close. In my time in the private sector, I developed a fierce belief in how we can and must act here in Washington to support and spur American private sector manufacturing. Before I came here, much of my work in the private sector was at a manufacturing company, a materials-based science company that makes hundreds of products. At one point I was part of a site location team that had to decide where to locate a new state-of-the-art semiconductor chip packaging manufacturing plant.

What made the difference? In the ultimate decision it was first and foremost we needed a skilled and reliable workforce. Second, we wanted the State, county, and city governments to be responsive and have made investments in infrastructure. While we also of course considered tax credits and training grants, the first two really were the main factors—the skills and capabilities of the workforce at all levels and the responsiveness of the local government, the State government, and the Federal Government in investing in infrastructure.

This experience taught me two things: that the advanced manufacturing sector can thrive in the United States—that facility was located in America, not overseas; and there is a critical role for government to play. So if this Congress makes a concerted, across-the-board push to help create manufacturing jobs in America, I am convinced we can lay a strong foundation for growth today and tomorrow. The opportunity is there, just in front of us. We just need to stop the endless partisan struggles that have dominated this Congress in the last few years and seize the very real, very positive opportunity in front of us—to lay out a bipartisan path forward to strengthen the manufacturing sector in our country.

Together, we can keep our factories humming and lead the way in new industries in the future. We just need the political will to try. That is what this effort, Manufacturing Jobs for America, is all about.

I am so grateful to Senator KLOBUCHAR and the Joint Economic Committee for the Manufacturing Jobs for The Future report and for the vision it lays out, and I appreciate the effort of all of my colleagues who contributed great and strong and clear ideas to this Manufacturing Jobs for America initiative.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the bill we are about to vote on is a good bill.

It is the product of an extensive bipartisan, bicameral agreement between the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives. We have passed a defense bill every year for the last 51 years. This bill deserves to be the 52nd because, like our previous bills, it does the right thing for our troops, their families, and our Nation's security. It passed the House with a vote of 350 to 69, and it deserves an equally strong bipartisan vote in the Senate tonight.

Yesterday I praised the members of our committee, and I also noted the amazing work of our staff, and I am not going to repeat that.

This bill is not a Christmas gift to our troops and their families. Authorizing funding for our troops, supporting our troops and their families is what we owe them. It is the least we can do, for they are the gift—they are the gift to this country, to this Nation, and to all of its people.

I would like to describe some of the many important provisions in this bill.

The bill includes numerous provisions to sustain the compensation and quality of life that our service men and women and their families deserve as they face the hardships imposed by continuing military operations around the world. For example, our bill reauthorizes over 30 types of bonuses and special pays aimed at encouraging enlistment, re-enlistment, and continued service by Active Duty and Reserve component military personnel.

It authorizes $25 million in supplemental impact aid to local educational agencies with military dependent children and $5 million in impact aid for schools with military dependent children with severe disabilities.

It enhances DOD programs to assist veterans in their transition to civilian life and increase their opportunities for early employment by improving access to credentialing programs for civilian occupational specialties.

It requires the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to ensure that the electronic health records systems of the two Departments are interoperable and provide a single integrated display of data.

The bill also includes funding needed to provide our troops the equipment and support that they need for ongoing combat, counterinsurgency, and stability operations around the world. For example, our bill authorizes $9.9 billion for U.S. Special Operations Command, including both base budget funding and OCO funding.

It authorizes nearly $1 billion for counter-IED efforts, beginning to ramp down expenditures in this area, while ensuring that we make investments needed to protect our forces from roadside bombs.

It provides $6.2 billion in funding to train and equip the Afghan National Army and Afghan Police, as requested by the commander of U.S. forces in Afghanistan, so that we can complete the transition of security responsibility, as planned, by the end of 2014.

It authorizes the Secretary of Defense—upon a determination from the President that it is in the national security interests of the United States—to use up to $150 million of amounts authorized for the Coalition Support Fund account in fiscal years 2013 and 2014 to support the border security operations of the Jordanian Armed Forces.

It extends global train and equip—section “1206”—authority through 2017 to help build the capacity of foreign force partners to conduct counterterrorism and stability operations.

The bill includes a compromise on Guantanamo, which eases the transfer of Gitmo detainees overseas, while retaining prohibitions on transfers to the United States. It includes 36 provisions to strengthen DOD's response to the problem of sexual assault in our military.

The bill includes hundreds of other important provisions to ensure that the Department can carry out its essential national defense missions. For example, Section 121 of the bill increases the cost cap for the Gerald R. Ford aircraft carrier program as requested by the Department of Defense and tightens cost controls on the program. In the absence of this provision, DOD would have to stop work on the aircraft carrier, resulting in the layoff of thousands of workers and an additional cost of up to $1 billion dollars on the Ford and subsequent ships.

Section 352 of the bill requires DOD to eliminate the development and fielding of service-specific combat and camouflage utility uniforms and instead move to combat and camouflage uniforms that are used by all members of the Armed Forces. This provision addresses a finding by GAO that identified DOD's fragmented approach to developing and acquiring combat uniforms as a significant source of duplication and waste in the Department.

Section 904 of the bill requires the Secretary of Defense to streamline DOD management headquarters at all levels by changing or reducing the size of staffs, eliminating tiers of management, cutting functions that provide little or no added value, and consolidating overlapping and duplicative programs and offices. We expect this provision to save $40 billion or more over the next 10 years.

Section 1024 of the bill allows the Secretary of the Navy to settle 20-year old litigation arising from the default termination of the contract for the production of the A-12 aircraft. Under the proposed settlement authorized by this provision the Navy will receive ships and aircraft worth almost $400 million at no cost to the government.

Section 1098 of the bill authorizes the Department of Defense to transfer unnneeded aircraft to the Forest Service, providing the Forest Service with much-needed replacements for aging wildfire suppression aircraft. This provision was based on a Senate floor amendment which we were unable to adopt even though it had been cleared on both sides.

Section 1302 of the bill authorizes the use of funds available under the Cooperative Threat Reduction—CTR—program to eliminate Syrian chemical weapons. This provision will give DOD the funding flexibility that it says it needs to carry out the destruction of these dangerous weapons, as provided by our agreements with the Russians and others.

Section 2807 of the bill requires that all future military construction projects funded using in-kind payments from partner nations under an international agreement be submitted for congressional authorization. That may not sound like a big deal, but this provision is the result of a yearlong investigation by the committee staff, in which we learned that DOD was using in-kind payments from our allies to fund questionable military construction projects without appropriate oversight.

Section 2941 through 2946 of the bill authorize a new land withdrawal to expand the Marine Corps training range at 29 Palms in California. This provision was the No. 1 legislative priority of the Marine Corps this year. As the Commandant of the Marine Corps explained in an August 29 letter to the committee, the Marine Corps has spent more than 6 years analyzing and preparing for this expansion to ensure that the Corps can meet its minimum training criteria for live fire and maneuver training. The Commandant's letter explains:

Although Twentynine Palms has served the Marine Corps well since the 1940s, it is currently inadequate to properly train our Marine Palms is my top legislative priority. Successful MEB training requires coordinated simultaneous air and ground live fire in concert with ground maneuvers over a 48–72 hour period involving 15,000 Marines. Although a MEB is our principal fighting force, we currently lack sufficient training space to train a MEB-sized unit. The Marine Corps proposes to correct this training and readiness shortfall by expanding Twentynine Palms through the withdrawal and acquisition of 168,000 acres in the Johnson Valley area.

These are just a few examples drawn from hundreds of provisions in this bill. As Gen Martin Dempsey, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told us last week, the authorities included in this bill “are critical to the Nation's defense and urgently needed to ensure we all keep faith with the men and women, military and civilian, selflessly serving in our Armed Forces.”

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TRIBUTE TO NORTHWEST HIGH SCHOOL FOOTBALL TEAMHON. JOHN K. DELANEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Coach Mike Neubeiser and the Northwest High School football team of Germantown, Maryland, who won the Maryland Class 4A State football championship on Friday, December 6th.

With a 33–16 victory over Suitland High School, the Northwest Jaguars capped off a 12–2 season. This is Northwest's first state football championship since 2004 and the first state championship for a Montgomery County high school since 2008.

Even though Coach Neubeiser's team started the season with two losses in their first eight games, the Jaguars turned their season around to win the state title. This improbable turnaround proves that even when faced with adversity, Coach Neubeiser and his staff can inspire these young adults to accomplish great things. Thanks to his leadership, Northwest student-athletes have excelled both on the field and in the classroom. I wish the Northwest Jaguars the best of luck next season as they defend their title.

I ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues help me in honoring this significant accomplishment.

JONATHAN SEROTA YALE MODEL
CONGRESS SPEECHHON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, Mr. Speaker, to draw your attention to a speech given by one of my young constituents, Jonathan Serota of Brookville, NY. Jonathan ran for President of Yale Model Congress and spoke about the need for compromise and commitment to our country. His words are wise beyond his years and all of the members of this chamber would do well to hear them. I'd like to share them with you now and hereby insert Jonathan's speech as follows in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

For 408 hours, the government of the United States of America shut down its facilities and closed its doors. Over the course of that tumultuous time, national parks, museums, and public grounds were barred to visitors. 800,000 Federal workers were sent home from their jobs, and many more were forced to work with delayed pay. Veterans, and active duty military personnel and their families were kept in a constant state of fear, worried about making ends meet. This period of panic was not caused by some foreign aggressor, some archenemy of state, or some ruthless tyrant. No, the crisis that shook the very faith that the American people had in their government, was caused by that very body itself. So who is to blame for the government shutdown? Shall we point fingers at Republicans? How about the Democrats? It must be someone's fault right? That IS what our political system has taught us isn't it? Well, it appears that recently, that is just what it has done. As the ominous clouds descended upon the capital in the early hours of October the 1st, the government shutdown that took place in the District of Columbia, and all across the country, had effects that will continue to be impactful for years to come.

Model Congress. The word 'model' implies a want or desire to replicate, to recreate and imitate. For years now, thousands of students have come to Yale and other conferences alike, and taken pride in acting as Senators, Representatives, Cabinet Members, and Presidents. We have touted our accomplishments on our resumes, shined our gavels and framed our certificates. My question to you tonight is: Do we really, want to model Congress? The body which we have all gathered here tonight to replicate has, over the past several years, produced a stalemate and inefficiency that has rarely been seen in the long and arduous history of both man and this nation. Complete ideological division, refusal to compromise, and the inability to put national interest above self interest has weakened our country, as well as its image both at home and abroad. Why is it as teenagers, we are able to sit down, talk, work out our problems, and come to productive agreements, but as adults, we put our fingers in our ears and stomp our feet on the ground until we get what we want? The roles seem to be backwards if you ask me.

People would like to have you believe that we are naive, we are inexperienced, and we know too little about the world to make decisions on our own. Well I argue the contrary. I think that they are too rigid, they are too closed minded, and they are too pleased with pushing the blame onto others, that they fail to see that the problem is caused by no one else but themselves.

Is this what America is about? Surely the land of the free and the home of the brave is not just some idealistic nonsense that we were told about in second grade, and then by the cruel hand of fate, forced to rule out as anything but true. The American ideal that we all hold dear to our hearts, the feeling of honor that sweeps over our senses and rushes down our spine when we publicly declare, "I am proud to be an American!" is only true because our government is about us, the people. We, the people, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity. We are that posterity.

We have come to this conference to argue for things which we are passionate about, and argue against those which we are passionately not about. We have come to this conference to test each other, and our ability to work together to shape both foreign and domestic policy. We have come to this conference to gain experience, to gain knowledge, and to make progress not only for ourselves, but also for those who feel that their opinion doesn't matter. While most of us came here tonight with distinct political agendas, we have always been able to open our minds, challenge our beliefs, and move together in the hope that we may one day truly create what Ronald Reagan famously described as, "that shining city on a hill."

I love what we do here at Model Congress. If you ask me, I don't think we imitate Congress, we act better than it. We don't aspire to be like them, we aspire to be better than them. Here, at this conference, we have come together to act like the body of government that the founders intended. There are no special interest groups, no superpacs, no shady campaign deals, and no political parties. There is only the work we have set out to do, and the goals which we wish to achieve.

As I sat to write this speech, I decided that I wanted to talk about something that really mattered to us, the youth of America. Now, I could have simply gotten up here, shouted a couple of phrases like "legalize marijuana," "Make the playing field fairer," "lower taxes," "feed the hungry" and "help the poor." And while I'm sure that I would have gotten a couple of apathetic rounds of applause, I thought that it would be more prudent to get up here, and as I have, talk about something that we, both as citizens and as young adults, are frustrated with in the hopes of bringing about change.

If elected I vow to each and every one of you, that I will help us take those first frightening steps into the obscure and unsure future. I will do my best to lead this conference in a way so that Congressmen, Senators, Governors, and Presidents alike know that we won't accept anything less than that second grade idealistic dream, so that our peers both here and at home know that we mean business, and so that we may all realize that we must join hands and look into the unknown abyss that is our future, and conquer it with the fearless determination that is so quintessentially American.

With hope and faith, we move forward together. With knowledge and determination, we strive, to make a better tomorrow. May God Bless each and every one of you, and may God Bless the United States of America.

MAG STRITTMATTER

HON. ED PERLMUTTER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud Mag Strittmatter for her outstanding service and commitment to our community.

It takes great strength to face the heart-breaking issues of poverty day after day, and even more strength to lead others in that fight. Leading The Action Center, Mag has that strength in abundance. She has overseen a revolution in volunteer engagement at the Action Center, where more than 7,000 volunteers contribute annually for the good of the community. She has built on-going partnerships with Red Rocks Community College, Jeffco Human Services and the Metro Community Provider Network to bring resources to clients in one location. In her mentoring she can identify strengths and build the organization around them, with the deep wisdom to see that each person has an important role. Under her leadership, The Action Center's revenue increased by more than 600% since 2002. Directly affecting the community she serves in such a positive way.

I extend my deepest congratulations to Mag Strittmatter for her well deserved honor by the West Chamber serving Jefferson County. I have no doubt she will exhibit the same dedication and character in all her future accomplishments.

IN RECOGNITION OF RALPH WHITE

HON. WILLIAM R. KEATING

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I, along with Representative KENNEDY, Representative MCGOVERN, Representative NEAL, and Representative TSONGAS rise today to recognize Mr. Ralph White, President of the Retired State, County and Municipal Employees Association of Massachusetts, upon his upcoming retirement.

Mr. White has diligently served the Association for the past forty-five years, and his leadership has guided this organization through many changes. Having retired at the age of thirty-eight from his position as a parole officer in the aftermath of a gunfire assault, Mr. White knew that there was still much for him to give to the Commonwealth. He then began his role of President of the Association. Throughout his tenure, he was instrumental in enacting many key reforms that benefit retirees. Such reforms included raising the pension cost-of-living ceiling, ensuring that retirees' and survivors' health insurance payments remained at a reasonable level, and improving protections for disability retirees. Mr. White has given a great deal to the Association and to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and his perseverance has touched many lives.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleagues join us in thanking Mr. Ralph White for his many years of service.

HONORING THE BARBER SHOPPE IN KIRKLAND

HON. SUZAN K. DELBENE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Ms. DELBENE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the Barber Shoppe in Kirkland on fifty years of successful business. Since it opened in 1964, the Barber Shoppe has been providing the community with quality service and customer care. Their commitment to excellence has ensured that business stays steady in rough economic times and remains a local favorite.

I would like to give special recognition to Bill Bitz, the man who first started the business in the 1960's. Although Bill died last year at the age of 86, his legacy lives on at the Barber Shoppe. Bill instilled a special charm in the family-owned business that is behind its popularity.

Bill's daughter, Brenda Gordon, proudly took over the shop from her father when he retired. Gordon's training at Folks Barber College in Renton has helped her to continually enhance and improve the shop.

Although the shop now has a new building and a new name, it continues its legacy of classic comfort and high quality care. The Barber Shoppe serves as a role model for many other local businesses that hope to achieve a similar record of success.

I congratulate the Barber Shoppe on all of its accomplishments, and thank it for its contribution to the Kirkland community.

HONORING MR. RAYMOND THOMAS "R.T." RYBAK

HON. KEITH ELLISON

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. ELLISON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and honor the contributions of R.T. Rybak to the city of Minneapolis during his 12-year tenure as mayor, and to applaud his leadership in areas from education to government accountability to economic opportunity. Mayor Rybak has been an outstanding leader, a great public servant and a close friend.

R.T. Rybak, a Minneapolis native, began his distinguished career as a journalist for the Minneapolis Tribune. While working for various media outlets—including the Twin Cities Reader, Minnesota Public Radio, and Public Radio International—he was also an organizer who ran political campaigns and engaged in community activism. He campaigned for airport noise mitigation, sponsoring the famous "Pajama Protest" of 1999. Mayor Rybak's tactics have been inventive and inclusive, and his openness has made him a strong ally of communities often left out of the political process.

Mayor Rybak confronted a city with serious challenges: an increasing budget deficit, a stark achievement gap, pension issues, and public safety concerns. He went to work immediately, making difficult decisions to adjust taxes and budget priorities. Under his leadership, Minneapolis cut spending by 16 percent and paid down $350 million of the city's debt, in spite of repeated state-level funding cuts. Faced with crises such as the 2007 collapse of the I-35W bridge, and the 2009 Great Recession, Mayor Rybak helped the city recover with poise and energy. He was a strong advocate for Minneapolis residents, while also using these opportunities to bolster mass transit infrastructure and to further diversify our economy. Minneapolis has recovered all 10,000 jobs lost in the recession, and added an additional 5,000. The city now ranks first in the country for its low unemployment rate, and is less susceptible to future economic fluctuations.

Minneapolis is safer now than it has been in years. Most crimes have fallen to levels not seen in 35 years.

The people of Minneapolis are also more connected and informed. City-wide wireless internet, digital access to government information and services, and a forum for viewing city goals have made Minneapolis more open and accessible.

Mayor Rybak's advocacy for North Minneapolis, in particular, has been long overdue on the city's agenda. He increased city investment in addressing persistent gaps in education, housing, and economic opportunity that have faced North Minneapolis for decades. He championed programs that trained residents and placed them into good jobs, working with businesses to create sustainable, meaningful employment. He reduced foreclosures, and used city-owned land to promote affordable green housing. Mayor Rybak has laid the foundation for revitalizing North Minneapolis, and I am confident that our city's future leaders will follow his lead.

Mayor Rybak has also tackled the significant challenges facing Minneapolis schools. He started Minneapolis Promise, which provides young people with free college and career counseling and high-quality summer jobs. Since 2004, the STEP-UP internship program has given real-world job experience to over 18,000 Minneapolis youth. Rybak has led the effort to close one of the nation's widest achievement gaps by connecting schools, government agencies, non-profit organizations, and businesses to work together for our children's futures. This will be one of the lasting achievements he leaves with Minneapolis, as he continues the fight to close the achievement gap as the next Chief Executive of Generation Next.

Minneapolis will always be indebted to Mayor Rybak. From the balanced books of the city's treasurer, to the youth who can aspire to greater opportunity than their parents, to the residents headed to a secure job after months or years out of work, his achievements have improved Minneapolis and I thank him for his tireless service to our community.

LAKEWOOD HIGH SCHOOL

HON. ED PERLMUTTER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud Lakewood High School for their tremendous compassion and character shown during the floods that happened in the State of Colorado in September. This high school located in Lakewood, Colorado must be acknowledged because they showed incredible spirit and support to other schools around Colorado during a time of emergency.

After winning the Good Morning America Katy Perry contest, the students of Lakewood High School used their moment in the national spotlight to direct national attention towards other students throughout the state affected by the floods. There are countless stories of different student groups and organizations within the school sending supplies, money and support to other students who were in need the most. This is exemplary of the character and compassion the faculty instills in the students at this high school.

I extend my deepest gratitude to Lakewood High School in their display of school spirit for their school and also for the State of Colorado. I am certain the students in this school will exhibit the same dedication and character in all of their future accomplishments.

HONORING MICHELLE "MISSY"
PALMISCIANO

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Michelle "Missy" Palmisciano is Founder and President of County Harvest—a non-profit food rescue organization she began in 2009 to ensure that good food otherwise being discarded was instead saved and delivered by volunteers to area soup kitchens, food pantries and homeless shelters.

With more than 200 volunteers, and relationships with dozens of County-based agencies and food donor businesses, Missy and her award-winning organization do more than 60 food rescue runs each week and have collected over 1 million pounds of food since County Harvest began feeding thousands of men, women and children every year. County Harvest continually seeks new food donors and agencies throughout Westchester County.

Missy is also a member of the Planning Board for the Village of Pelham Manor and an Advisory Board Member for Community Service Associates in Mt. Vernon. She has served as a Board Member for the Junior League of Pelham as co-chair of Community Outreach, member of the Prospect Hill Site Based Counsel, Board Member of Huguenot Nursery School and various committee roles supporting The Picture House and the Pelham Public Library's Novel Night.

She and her husband James have three children: daughters Jessica, and twins Allison and Sarah. She is being honored by the Pelham Civic Association for her extensive work in helping her community to be a better, and healthier, place to live. I salute her for her good works and wish her every success in her future endeavors.

RECOGNIZING THE FIFTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF ROBERT AND CAROLYN BLACK OF VALPARAISO, FLORIDA

HON. JEFF MILLER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the Fiftieth Wedding Anniversary of Robert and Carolyn Black of Valparaiso, Florida. A tireless and dedicated member of my staff who has been with me since the beginning of my time here in Congress, Bob is the epitome of an unwavering public servant, and I am grateful to have known him and his wife Carolyn for over twelve years. I am proud to honor the Blacks and congratulate them on this remarkable milestone.

Bob and Carolyn, both born into military families, have called many places home; however, it was each of their homes in Ohio in the 1960s that would prove to be particularly special to them. Their parents were both stationed at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base outside of Springfield, OH, and as neighbors, Carolyn was literally "the girl next door." Bob and Carolyn attended the same school, Greenon High. Bob's wit and intellect won over Carolyn's heart and became a perfect match to her grace and charm. As high school sweethearts, on November 23, 1963, Bob and Carolyn were married.

The son of an Air Force Pilot, Bob followed in his father's footsteps and was commissioned in the United States Air Force. Over the course of the last fifty years since their paths first crossed, Bob and Carolyn's journey would include assignments throughout the U.S. and around the world. Bob was steadfast in his commitment to support the varied missions of the United States, whether it be operating C-130s or C-141s, fulfilling his test pilot obligations, or commanding troops responsible for safe passage of everything from penguins to Presidents. Carolyn, having been daughter to a pilot herself, was equally steadfast in her commitment to the mission of a military wife and mother. She focused her troops on the active exploration of what each new location had to offer, the intentional effort to forge strong relationships with one another, and the importance of an open mind. It is unquestioned that the success of their partnership is possible because of the strength and love Bob and Carolyn share.

Bob's last assignment as the Vice Commander of the Air Force Development Test Center at Eglin Air Force Base, Florida brought them to the Gulf Coast in 1992. Bob retired from the Air Force as a Colonel in October 1994, though, with Carolyn's continued support, he continues to contribute to the defense of our country, including his role on my staff as my Senior Military Advisor.

Bob and Carolyn have accomplished much together, but their greatest achievement is their five daughters. They are the proud parents of Christine (and Brian McCann), Shana (and Christopher Swartz), Kelly (and Shawn Swartz), Sarah Kate, and Anna Lauren, and proud grandparents to Jack, Kate, Alden, and Bridget. All five daughters have continued their parent's commitment to family, community and compassion through their professions, such as nursing, medical research and specialty healthcare for Veterans as well as their personal endeavors such as programs for special needs children and Scouting leadership. Needless to say, Bob and Carolyn enjoy spending time with their family and the beauty of the Emerald Coast.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the United States Congress, I am humbled to recognize the dedicated service of Bob and Carolyn to the Northwest Florida community and this great Nation. My wife, Vicki, and I congratulate the Blacks, our dear friends, on their Golden Anniversary and wish them and their family all of God's blessings. May He grant them many more years of good health and happiness.

THOMAS O. BOORMAN

HON. TOM McCLINTOCK

OF CALIFORNIA

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. McCLINTOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Thomas O. Boorman, a man who dedicated much of his life to serving others. Thomas spent four years serving on a mine sweeper in the Navy. He went on to serve for twenty-six years in the United States Air Force, flying over five hundred missions in a B-52.

Upon his retirement from military service, Thomas felt the call to continue serving his community. He first joined the Placer County Sheriffs office and then worked as a control officer at Folsom State Prison.

Thomas Boorman was an avid sportsman and adventurer and a devoted supporter of the Second Amendment. He would speak openly about his love for his country, his community and the unique freedoms that Americans enjoy. His commitment to our freedoms was consistently illustrated by his lifetime of military and public service. Please join me in honoring Thomas Boorman, a man of lifelong service who will be sorely missed by so many.

HONORING THE GLACIER PEAK

Ms. DeBENE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 2013 Glacier Peak High School girls cross country team. On November 9, the Grizzlies repeated as 3A cross country state champions, and I would like to congratulate them on their impressive achievement.

The Grizzlies' championship title is the result of the hard work and strong effort of the entire team. I would like to give special recognition to senior Megan Davis, the team's top finisher at the state competition this year. Megan finished 12th overall with a time of 19:00.13. Beyond Davis, the team's success came from the efforts of freshmen Heidi Smith and Natalie Church, sophomore Charlie Sevenants, juniors Katherine Dittmann and Haley Longstreth, and senior Samantha Northrop.

The Glacier Peak girls cross country team has a legacy of success. Since it was established in 2007, the team has never finished any lower than seventh at the state competition, including three state championships in the past four years.

The Grizzlies' impressive record of success is a testament to their incredible work ethic and the impressive coaching of Dan Parker. Coach Parker has provided the Grizzlies with the encouragement and training necessary for the team to continuously perform at such a high level of competition.

Again, I congratulate the Glacier Peak Girls Cross Country Team on all of their success. Their accomplishments and awards from this season are hard-earned and well-deserved.

she developed a pilot children's public affairs program called Periscope. From there she went to the American Lung Association, initiated their anti-smoking campaign and became the Executive Director of Communications.

During this time she served on the Board of the Emelin Theater, on the Board of Larchmont Temple chairing the Adult Education Committee, the Board of LMC-TV that negotiated the original community cable agreement, the Board of Continuing Education, the School Board Selection Committee, and the Hispanic Resource Center, serving as Fund Chair and newsletter editor.

Mr. Flores served in a number of capacities, including as a Congressional Liaison Officer and as a Decision Review Officer. Following his retirement from the VA, Mr. Flores founded the Project Guiding Light Veterans Volunteer Advocacy Group, an organization focused on helping veterans navigate the benefits process at the VA. The group works closely with veterans and other Veterans Service Organizations to help veterans receive all of the benefits they have earned.

Mr. Flores worked extensively with the National Association of Chamorro Veterans in America (NOCVA), an organization seeking to unite and organize Chamorro veterans across the United States to advocate on behalf of the Chamorro people. The organization, which was founded in 2011, has focused its efforts on honoring Chamorro veterans, and serving as their voice in Washington. The Chamorro ancestry traces back to Guam and the Northern Mariana Islands.

Mr. Flores spent his entire life serving others, and helped thousands of veterans through his tireless advocacy and dedication. His legacy will endure and serve as an example to us all.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. RIGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of Albert Caswell, who has written a poem in honor of Staff Sergeant Jonathan Dozier of the United States Army. Staff Sergeant Dozier was killed in Sinsil, Iraq on January 9, 2008, while serving his country. He was a highly decorated soldier, earning the Bronze Star and Purple Heart for his heroic sacrifice and for his commitment to his fellow Americans. He is survived by his wife Amy, their daughter Emma and his sister Jennifer. As we come upon this holiday season, may we remember Staff Sergeant Dozier and his family, as well as all our veterans and military personnel who have sacrificed so much for this great nation.

DEAR JON

IN HONOR OF AN AMERICAN HERO WHO GAVE THAT LAST FULL MEASURE OF DEVOTION SSG JONATHAN KILIAN DOZIER 3RD SQUAD, 2ND
CAVALRY SCOUT SNIPER THE UNITED STATES ARMY

DEAR JON

Dear!
Dear Jon!
Rest my precious son!
Your war is over,
your fight is won!
And now, as an Angel in The Army of our Lord your new charge has begun!
As your soul went Airborne,
with your new wings oh high as won!
To watch over us from dusk to dawn!
To fight the darkness whenever it so forms!
And Jonathan we will miss you so,
now that you are gone!
Dear Jon!
But your life,
and your times within our hearts now so lives on!
To remind us all,
of America's Best with hearts so very warm!
Dear Jon!
And oh Jon,
what a truly great American Hero you are my son!
Dear Jon. . . .
for your life was short but like a shining star shines on!
Of such selflessness,
who our Nation has so blessed!
As Strength In Honor was but your life's quest!
As your fine soul was built upon the bedrock of morality,

not to rest!
But For The Greater Good,
as you so gave all that you so could!
That Last Full Measure!
One's Life,
The Greatest of all Treasures!
As the Angels wept!
As they so saw what your fine soul would so except!

Dear Jon!
For you were Army Strong,
chapter and verse, your song!
Because you stood for Something,
from dusk to dawn!
Airborne!
Ah,
but with such pride that patch was worn!
A Soldier's Soldier!
A Scout Sniper,
who out into the darkness moved on!
A team leader,
from where such inspiration was so formed!
All on your lonesome on the edge!
As you were gone!
Bolder than Bolder!
Bad To The Bone,
damn right just like your Dad a BULLDOZIER who the word courage owned!

A perfect soldier, who our Lord God soul now so owns!
Dear Jon!
Rest my son!
And your fine wife Amy and daughter Emma,
miss you so with each new morning sun!
Looking into Emma's face,
as it's you we so see my son!
As your beautiful Sister Jennifer's heartache and tears have begun!
As she carries you in her heart and etched upon her arm!
And your Mother and Father's pain cannot so be undone!

Until, they all so meet you up in Heaven one fine day Dear!

Dear Jon!
And across Chesapeake this night,
as they lay their heads down to rest . . .
There comes a gentle rain from Heaven up above, are but our Lord's gift!

Are his tears to so ease your pain, that which you are all so left with, all of his love's!

Until one fine day you all so meet up in Heaven above!

And you won't have to cry no more!

In life!

Could we?

Would we?

Would we ever the strength to so find?

To live such a selfless life as Jonathan's all in time!

To fight the darkness and not ask why . . .

Dear Jon!

And now we lay your fine body down to rest!
As all of our tears begin to crest!

For you were one of those the most brilliant,
the best of the best!

Dear Jon!

You have died,

but you are not gone!

All in our souls you live on!

Amen!

HONORING JOE RUGGIERO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Joe Ruggiero, the Chief of the Pelham Manor Fire Department, is a lifelong resident of Pelham whose professional commitment to Pelham as a decorated Firefighter and Chief equals his charitable contributions to the countless number of children and their families he has helped.

Joe has dedicated decades using hockey to have a positive impact on community kids. After creating Learn to Play clinics in the Westchester area, he volunteered to coach in Pelham Youth Hockey's in house and travel programs. Joe continues to make significant contributions to Pelham and the tristate area with his volunteer coaching and administrative league duties with the New York Raptors, a unique program that focuses on providing mentally and physically challenged hockey players with the opportunities to play hockey with games and events that had never been offered to them before.

Because of his extraordinary contributions, he was recently presented at Madison Square Garden with the prestigious 2013 Emile Francis Award for "tireless efforts, sacrifices, dedication and service to youth hockey." His dedicated commitment for the past 29 years does not stop on the ice as he has been a dedicated member of various charities and altruistic causes and programs such as Ice Hockey in Harlem, Pelham Civic Association's Scholarship committee and as a volunteer with the local Recreation Department.

He and his wife Marcia reside in Pelham, with their three children, Jillian, Christopher, and Alexander, who all were educated in the Pelham School system. I congratulate Joe on his being honored by the Pelham Civic Association for his many years and many contributions to the betterment of life in his community.

EAGLE SCOUT CHANDLER
PRYMOWICZ

HON. LOU BARLETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. BARLETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Eagle Scout Chandler Prymowicz of Nanticoke, Pennsylvania who earned every possible merit badge recognized by the Boy Scouts of America.

At age 10, Chandler joined Boy Scout Troop 418 in Nanticoke. From his first day as a member of this organization, he was determined to earn every merit badge possible. To accomplish his goal, Chandler attended out of state merit badge colleges, volunteered as a camp counselor at Camp Minsi, and attended Jamboree in 2010. Even after reaching the rank of Eagle Scout at the age of 14, he continued to pursue this aspiration. On October 28th, 2013, Chandler completed the Sustainability merit badge, earning him a total of 137 merit badges and 12 palms. Only one out of every 225,000 Boy Scouts is able to achieve this feat. Although he will age out of the Boy Scouts this month, Chandler will stay involved in Scouting by becoming an assistant leader of Troop 418.

Mr. Speaker, for his determination and dedication to earn every available scouting badge, I commend Eagle Scout Chandler Prymowicz and wish him the best in his future endeavors.

QUINTEN CURTIS

HON. MARK MEADOWS

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. MEADOWS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Quinten Curtis, a 4th grade student from Granite Falls, North Carolina, who has truly demonstrated the spirit of Christmas this season. When his mother, Becky, asked for his Christmas list, Quinten requested two things: a clarinet and 100 cans of food for the South Caldwell Christian Ministries.

Quinten has proved that every one of us can have an impact on our community. His dedication to helping others is truly exemplary and he is a role model for children and adults alike. Quentin set a goal of donating 100 cans by Christmas, but so far has collected more than six times that amount. His selflessness is contagious and has motivated others in his community to participate, collecting donations at the First United Methodist Church.

Quinten's generosity is an inspiration to us all this holiday season, exhibiting the true meaning of Christmas.

HONORING WILLIAM ABRAMSON

His commitment is impressive. Bill was President of the Board of Directors of the Riverdale YM-YWHA for four years and is now the Chairman of the Board. He is a Past President of the Benjamin Franklin Reformed Democratic Club and is presently a member of the Van Courtland Park Conservancy.

He served as Chairman of Community Board No. 8 in the Bronx for three years, and was the impetus for the creation of the 197-A plan, a system by which city agencies and local groups inspire area growth. He received the 2000 David Rockefeller Fellowship for helping to develop top private sector leaders and engage them in New York City's public arena. He is also Vice President of the Union Square Partnership, and a member of The Greenwich Village Chelsea Chamber of Commerce and Village Alliance.

He has been selected several times as "Commander for the Day" by the Policeman's Association and "Principal for a Day" by PEN-CIL. Mayor Bloomberg appointed Bill to the Workforce Investment Board, where he is on the Strategic Planning Committee.

HONORING HIS EMINENCE
FRANCIS EUGENE CARDINAL
GEORGE, O.M.I., ON THE 50TH AN-NIVERSARY OF HIS ORDINATION

HON. DANIEL LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Francis Cardinal George on the 50th anniversary of his Ordination to the Priesthood. Yesterday I joined more than 100 bishops from around the world and hundreds of members of the Chicago Archdiocese in congratulating Cardinal George as he celebrated this milestone with a Mass at Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago, Illinois where he has served as leader of the Archdiocese for almost 17 years. Francis Eugene George was born in 1937 to Francis and Julia George on Chicago's Northwest side. He grew up there with his older sister Margaret and attended St. Pascal School. At the age of 13 he was diagnosed with polio, and to this day wears a leg brace to support the muscles that were damaged by his battle with the illness.

But George persevered and kept his faith, enrolling at St. Henry Preparatory Seminary in Belleville, Illinois, an affiliated high school with the Missionary Oblates of Mary Immaculate. He would eventually join the Missionary Oblates and would make his solemn vow as a member of the order. George was ordained a priest in 1963 at St. Pascal Church where his Catholic education had started as a boy. The following year he received a degree in theology from the University of Ottawa, his first of many degrees including a doctorate in Philosophy from Tulane University and a doctorate in Sacred Theology from the Pontifical Urbaniana University.

After spending time as a professor, George continued to serve his order when he became the Vicar General for the Oblates of Mary Immaculate. For 12 years, he traveled to missions in some of the poorest regions of Africa, Latin America and Asia. In 1990 Pope John Paul II appointed George as the fifth Bishop of the Diocese of Yakima, Washington. In 1996 he was appointed the ninth Archbishop of Portland in Oregon when he was installed by Pope John Paul II at the Cathedral of the Immaculate Conception. George would serve there for less than a year before he was appointed by Pope John Paul II to the vacant See of Chicago. He was the first native Chicagoan to be appointed as the Archbishop of Chicago, which serves 2.2 million Catholics in 356 different parishes. Within the first year of his service in Chicago, George was elevated to the honor of Cardinal.

For almost 17 years Cardinal George has led his people in the Chicago Archdiocese with his unmatched intellect and warmth. At Mass yesterday, Archbishop Joseph Kurtz, president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops, very aptly described George as "intelligent and articulate, courageous and curious, humble, zealous." Kurtz continued, "Like Pope Francis, we see in you a generous heart and zealous missionary spirit . . . a humble man of vision."

Today I express my admiration for Cardinal George's devotion to the Archdiocese of Chicago and the entire community, and honor his lifetime of achievements. I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing Francis Cardinal George well as he celebrates the 50th anniversary of his ordination, and to thank him for his inspiring service.

OF COLORADO

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud Loretta DiTirro for her outstanding service and commitment to our community.

Loretta is an extremely passionate and persuasive individual, especially when it comes to community. She was instrumental in changing the name of the Wheat Ridge Business Association, to help give more definition to the purpose and future of the group. Loretta ensures that the Wheat Ridge business members are well informed and well connected to the community at large, and she drove the membership from 30 to 200 members. She hosts events in her home to raise money for the Feed the Future Backpack Program, giving back to the children of her community. She opened up her garden for the Inaugural Wheat Ridge Garden Tour, and recruits volunteers for the historic Wheat Ridge Carnation Festival. As an influential leader and organizer, she is a valuable asset to the Wheat Ridge and Jefferson County communities.

I extend my deepest congratulations to Loretta DiTirro for her well deserved honor by the West Chamber serving Jefferson County. I have no doubt she will exhibit the same dedication and character in all her future accomplishments.

IN HONOR OF MRS. EVELYN STEVENS

HON. ROBERT B. ADERHOLT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. ADERHOLT. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to honor Mrs. Evelyn Stevens, a member of my staff for almost seventeen years. Evelyn is retiring this year after over 34 years of service to the U.S. House of Representatives.

Evelyn began working for my predecessor, Congressman Tom Beville, in 1979 and has worked continuously since then with passion and dedication for the constituents of the current Fourth Congressional District of Alabama. It would be difficult to count the number of constituents that she has helped during her tenure with the Fourth District of Alabama.

Evelyn was married for almost 40 years to Milton "Bud" Stevens and has two daughters, Renita Rigney and Amelia Sutter. She has five grandchildren and ten great-grandchildren with two more great-grandchildren soon to be born. She enjoys traveling with her daughters and takes the time to visit a different baseball stadium in the country during a trip they take every year. Evelyn is also an avid bowler, bowling every Tuesday evening with her team.

Few people can look back on their life and see that they have contributed so much to the well-being of their fellow citizens and their country. Evelyn Stevens is one of those people.

On behalf of myself and all the people of Alabama's Fourth Congressional District, I can never thank her enough for her hard work and dedication to serving the people of Alabama and the United States of America.

May God bless Evelyn in the years to come.

cation and character in all her future accomplishments.

BURMA

HON. JOSEPH R. PITTS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, despite U.S. officials continuing to celebrate the alleged "opening" of Burma and planning projects such as bringing electricity to the entire country, we need to stop and listen to the people of Burma. The ethnic groups have a different story to tell, one which does not support U.S. agencies' narrative. Ethnic minorities are not celebrating this alleged "opening." Instead, they continue to be forced to defend themselves from offensive attacks by the Burma army and regime.

Some officials in Washington act as if democracy has suddenly infused all levels of government and all policies in Burma, including by welcoming and feting Shwe Mann, the 3rd ranking official in the "former" dictatorship who is now serving as the Speaker of the Combined House of Parliament. The people of Burma are still fighting for freedom of speech, conscience, belief, and association. Political prisoners still languish in prison, the Muslim minority has been brutally attacked by factions of the Buddhist majority with nary an outcry by Aung San Suu Kyi or other democratically elected leaders, and Kachin women and girls are still raped by soldiers bent on purifying minority bloodlines. How can a government that continues to implement policies that directly contradict democratic principles be so embraced by the international community, including by U.S. officials?

What is wrong with this picture? The Administration is supporting those in favor of removing a dictatorship in one country while embracing a brutal dictatorship in another country. How is it that in one area of the world, our government has provided training and weapons to groups working against a dictatorship—even as some members of the opposition may have direct links to Al Qaeda—while in Burma, we have turned our backs on a population that has longed for democracy, freedom, and the protection of basic rights?

These inconsistent policies are deeply disturbing. "Former" dictators who truly desired to establish a democracy would stop using forced labor in military projects; would end horrific attacks against the Kachin, Northern Shan and Taang communities; would cease rearming, rebuilding, and resupplying their bases in ethnic territories; and would discontinue using bait and switch tactics in negotiations.

In recent negotiations between the Burma Government and the ethnic groups, the Government acts as if the ethnic groups should prove that they are trustworthy in terms of any ceasefire agreement. I would strongly posit that it's the other way around: the Government of Burma must prove its trustworthiness to the ethnic groups by ending its aggression before any ceasefire occurs. The ethnic minorities have simply defended their people and states when under attacks initiated by the Burma government. It is time for those attacks to stop, it is time for the Burma Army to withdraw from the ethnic areas, and it is time for the international community to stop indirectly facilitating the blatant racism in Burma by normalizing every relationship with the regime Burma and instead express exceptional disappointment with the failure to move forward towards honest political dialogue and true democracy.

I call on the Government of Burma to prove its commitment to democracy and peace by unconditionally and immediately ending the horrific attacks against ethnic minorities and fully withdrawing from their territories. Earn the trust of the people by showing, over the long term, that you truly have turned 180 degrees and will implement democratic principles instead of imposing a dictatorship on the population.

I call on the Obama Administration to embrace the reality in Burma. Listen to what the people who live inside Burma say they desire. They want to live in peace, but that will not happen until the Burma Government and Army stop their attacks against the ethnic groups and enact a nationwide ceasefire. The U.S. Administration needs to stop its direct and indirect support for the Burma Government and Army by discontinuing assistance until specific benchmarks are met, by delaying any Pentagon training until all attacks against minorities cease, and by ensuring the ethnic nationality groups are given a full and equal place at the table to help decide the future of their country.

To the ethnic nationalities of Burma—stand your ground. You deserve to have your rights and freedoms protected and you deserve an equal place at the table to decide the future of your country.

RECOGNIZING THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF LIBERTY HIGH SCHOOL AND THE WORLD OF WONDERS SCIENCE PROGRAM

HON. JERRY McNERNEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. McNERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Liberty High School in Brentwood, California. Liberty High School was the recipient of the Lawrence Livermore National Security's (LLNS) Community Gift Program for the school's AP Environmental Science and Calculus Classes. These classes engage students in science through a water quality monitoring project that allows students to sample, analyze, and interpret water quality data for Marsh Creek.

I also want to recognize the World of Wonders Science Museum in Lodi, California, which also was a recipient of the LLNS Community Gift Program. This museum offers hands-on, science-based exhibits and programs to disadvantaged schools within San Joaquin County.

Engaging young people in science, technology, math, and education programs is key to ensuring that the United States remains a world leader in technology advancements and innovation. We must challenge our children intellectually and find ways to keep them interested in making our world a better place.

It is in the classroom, the home, and our community that children are inspired to learn and explore. Liberty High School and the World of Wonders Science Museum represent what can be accomplished when all partners involved work together.

I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Liberty High School and the World of Wonders Science Museum for earning a competitive grant and for the work they do with children in our community.

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Houses of Worship in the United States have played a major role in our communities, offering solace, support, and sustenance, both physical and moral, to all. In Mount Vernon, the Unity Baptist Tabernacle, under the guidance of the Rev. Edward Mulraine fulfills all those roles, and today we are celebrating Rev. Mulraine's tenth Pastoral Anniversary in guiding the membership of his church.

Rev. Mulraine has accomplished much in that time to help his Church, his Ministry and his Community.

He established a Men's Fellowship Choir, a Prayer Ministry, a Senior Ministry, and the Gospel Pearls. He expanded the Church's Ministry through radio station WVOV and the Internet. He instituted Women as Deacons and Unity Baptist Tabernacle saw its first Women Deacons in 2011. Unity Tabernacle now teaches Weekly Bible Study and has a Drama Ministry and a Catering Ministry.

More pragmatically Rev. Mulraine raised the funds for a new computer center which now has 14 brand new computers, installed new air conditioning in the Dining Hall, painted the sanctuary and redid the Church roof, and is paying off the $300,000 mortgage.

Beyond his church and ministry, Rev. Mulraine has aided his community by getting pedestrian crossing light on local streets, marching against violence, and protesting cuts to Day Care and Mount Vernon Hospital. He established the Annual Church Trip and Fellowship to South Carolina, started Home Coming after Summer Break, and fought for funds for the South Street Park.

Rev. Mulraine, and all of Mount Vernon, today celebrate his tenth anniversary as Minister of the Unity Baptist Tabernacle. I am proud to join in this celebration of a man who has made a great difference in his Church, his Ministry and his Community.

She often worked with children, and spent a number of years teaching D.A.R.E. in the Coventry School system. Frequently praised for her compassion for others, Officer Nancy was beloved by many in Coventry. She received numerous commendations and heartfelt letters of gratitude from those she had helped.

In 2008, Lieutenant Thurnauer played a crucial role in negotiating the surrender and apprehension of an armed assailant who had just committed a murder and was holding a child, refusing to surrender. Her courage and skill earned her the Department's Police Service Cross.

I ask that my colleagues join with me in honoring the career of Lieutenant Nancy Thurnauer. I wish her the best of luck with all her future endeavors. I have no doubt that she will remain an active member of her community in Coventry.

ACADIANA HIGH SCHOOL
WRECKIN' RAMS CROWNED
STATE CHAMPIONS

HON. CHARLES W. BOUSTANY, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. BOUSTANY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Acadiana High School Wreckin' Rams football team for recently being crowned Class 5A state champions by the Louisiana High School Athletic Association on December 14, 2013, in New Orleans. This team put on a show for the ages as it amassed a state finals rushing record of 634 yards night en route to its 77-41 win over the Parkway High Panthers in the state championship game. The 77 points by the Rams was a Class 5A record, including 42 points in the first half.

The game was a shootout with teams trading possessions frequently. Acadiana High School attributed its success to the veer offense which combined a strong offensive line with a formidable ground game. Evidenced by the fact four of the team's running backs gained over 140 yards under the bright lights of the Mercedes-Benz Superdome, the offensive scheme was a success.

This was Acadiana High School's third state championship. I'd like to congratulate Coach Ted Davidson, finals' Most Outstanding Player Edward Cormier, and the entire Wreckin' Rams team on their victory. This team made its community proud by the way it simply dominated its competition en route to becoming state champions.

I look forward to next year's football season and wish the Wreckin' Rams team good luck in defending its crown.

The Colorado CPA Society recognized Barbara with an award as a "CPA Making A Difference", based on her strong support for her community.

I extend my deepest congratulations to Barbara Scripps for her well deserved honor by the West Chamber serving Jefferson County. I have no doubt she will exhibit the same dedication and character in all her future accomplishments.

VERMILION CATHOLIC HIGH SCHOOL CAPTURES STATE 1A CROWN

HON. CHARLES W. BOUSTANY, JR.

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. BOUSTANY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Vermilion Catholic High School Screamin' Eagles of Abbeville for recently winning Louisiana's Class 1A state championship over the Saint Frederick Catholic High School Warriors on December 14, 2013, in the Mercedes-Benz Superdome in New Orleans. With a convincing 63-18 win, there was no doubt which team deserved to be crowned state champions.

The Vermilion Screamin' Eagles team capped off its perfect 10-0 season with an offensive display that kept fans on the edge of their seats. After trailing 3-0 early in the game, the Screamin' Eagles answered by scoring 42 of the next 49 points. It was too much for Saint Frederick to overcome as Vermilion continued its scoring barrage on offense and special teams while its defense refused to give the Warriors an opening. Vermilion used a balanced attack as it passed for 269 yards while rushing for another 216 yards. Recording 16 first downs was key to establishing a new Class 1A championship record for most points in a game.

Congratulations to Coach Russell Kuhns and his team as this state championship comes on the ten year anniversary of the Class 1A crown Vermilion won in 2003.

I look forward to next year's football season and wish the Screamin' Eagles team good luck in defending its crown.

HONORING THE MARIA KONOPNICKA POLISH LANGUAGE SCHOOL OF CHICAGO AND OAK LAWN, ILLINOIS ON ITS 40TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. DANIEL LIPINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Maria Konopnicka Polish Language School in Chicago and Oak Lawn, Illinois. This year the school will celebrate its 40th anniversary.

Chicagoland is home to the largest population of people of Polish descent living outside of Poland. The Polish Language School, named for the great Polish poet, novelist, and activist, Maria Konopnicka, serves this population by offering kindergarten through high school students the opportunity to connect with and explore their Polish heritage. For forty years the school has excelled in teaching its students Polish language, history, and culture. Thousands of children have learned about Polish cultural heritage as well as the role Poles play in the United States and the world community, now and in the future. With its emphasis on civic responsibility, the school shapes students dedicated to supporting and improving Chicago's communities, and I am proud to have it in my district.

While the school stresses the importance of its students, the community surrounding the school appreciates the hard work and dedication of all the staff at the Maria Konopnicka Polish Language School. Parents and students understand the school's success is thanks to the unceasing devotion of teachers and administrative staff who work relentlessly for the benefit of the students.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the outstanding faculties and students, both past and present, at the Maria Konopnicka Polish Language School, and congratulating them on this special 40th anniversary. May the school continue to exhibit excellence in teaching students about Polish cultural heritage and language for years to come.

HONORING THE BEAR CREEK BOYS SOCCER TEAM

HON. SUZAN K. DELBENE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Ms. DELBENE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 2013 Bear Creek High School boys soccer team. On November 23, the Bear Creek Grizzlies won the 1B/2B state championship, ending their impressive season with a record of 21–2–0. I congratulate them on this impressive achievement.

This championship victory was especially fulfilling for Bear Creek High School because it settled a rivalry between them and Grace Academy. The Grizzlies' only two losses during the season were to Grace Academy, with both of those games ending in 0–0 draws and decided by penalty kicks. Tied 0–0 at halftime, the Grizzlies would not let history repeat again, and they came together to win the state championship game by a score of 2–0.

I would like to give special recognition to Jesse Leuenberger and Nathan Sim who scored the two goals of the state final. Goalkeeper Blake Denniston also played a pivotal role in the final game, earning a shutout in the championship game.

The Grizzlies' defense racked up 16 shutouts this season and the offense outscored its opponents by 87–7.

The Grizzlies' impressive record this season is also a testament to the team's high level of coaching. Coach Chad Pohlman provided the boys with encouragement and training necessary to achieve this notable feat.

Again, I congratulate the Bear Creek boys soccer team on all of their success. Their accomplishments and success are hard-earned and well-deserved.

IN RECOGNITION OF ANGELA SANFILIPPO AND J.J. BARTLETT

HON. WILLIAM R. KEATING

OF MASSACHUSETTS

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Ms. Angela Sanfilippo and Mr. J.J. Bartlett, this year's recipients of the Offshore Mariners' Wives "Friends of the Fishing Industry" awards.

In late 1994, a group of people got together and formed an organization called the Massachusetts Fishermen's Partnership. The name was fitting, as it truly has been an organization or partnership of as many as eighteen distinct fishing organizations from throughout the state. The group's founders soon recognized the strong need for comprehensive health care for fishermen and their families.

One of the original founding members of the MFP and one of this year's award recipients is Mrs. Angela Sanfilippo. Ms. Sanfilippo is well known throughout the industry. For thirty-seven years she has been a constant crusader for the fishermen of Gloucester in her role as the President of the Gloucester Fishermen's Wives Association. She has battled to prevent the drilling for oil on Georges Bank and to keep The Stellwagen Bank National Marine Sanctuary open to fishing, both commercial and recreational. Her many years of dedicated service to the local fishing industry have been invaluable to its success.

This year's second recipient of the "Friend of the Fishing Industry Award" was Mr. J.J. Bartlett. For twenty years he has served as the focal point of the "Fishing Partnership's Health Plan" and has worked tirelessly on creating and providing affordable, comprehensive health care for fishing industry families. In 2008 the Boston Business Journal named him a "40 under 40" honoree, and in 2009 he testified on rural health issues and hard to reach populations at the request of the White House Office of Health Reform. The Fishing Partnership under the guidance of Mr. Bartlett now provides access to professional counseling, assistance with health insurance applications, and offering Safety at Sea Training. The Fishing Partnership has now become the Human Resources Department for the Massachusetts fishing community.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to honor Ms. Angela Sanfilippo and Mr. J.J. Bartlett, this year's recipients of the Offshore Mariners' Wives "Friends of the Fishing Industry" awards. I ask that my colleagues join me in thanking them for their service to the local Massachusetts fishing industry.

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, December 19, 2013

Mr. PERLMUTTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and applaud Michelle Claymore for her outstanding service and commitment to our community.

Michelle Claymore's enthusiasm for Jefferson County's economic vitality is both evident and contagious. She helped set in motion the AddOne campaign, improving the economy one job at a time, and has attracted, expanded and retained employment through her role as the Vice President of the Jefferson County Economic Development Corporation for the past 18 years. Michelle's innovative business incentive structure was instrumental in attracting the Coleman Company's corporate headquarters to relocate to Jefferson County in 2011. Understanding the importance of professional development, she started and runs the first nationally accredited economic development training program in Colorado. The program has trained over 200 students so far. Her passion for the county, its businesses and its citizens knows no bounds.

I extend my deepest congratulations to Michelle Claymore for her well deserved honor by the West Chamber serving Jefferson County. I have no doubt she will exhibit the same dedication and character in all her future accomplishments.

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Coach Todd Appel and the Fort Hill High School football team of Cumberland, Maryland, who won the Maryland Class 1A State football championship on Saturday, December 7th.

With a 25–0 victory over Douglass High School, the Fort Hill Sentinels capped off a perfect 14–0 season. This is Fort Hill's third state football championship in their school's history and the first since 1997. Throughout the 2013 regular season and playoffs, the Sentinels dominated their opponents. In the playoffs, competing against the best teams in the state, the Sentinels outscored their opponents by an impressive 162–13 margin.

In his sixth year as head coach, Coach Appel has compiled a 66–11 record. Throughout this success, Coach Appel has proven to be not just a great coach, but a trusted mentor to many young adults in Allegany County. Thanks to his leadership, Fort Hill student-athletes have excelled both on the field and in the classroom. I wish the Fort Hill Sentinels the best of luck next season as they defend their title.

I ask that you and my other distinguished colleagues help me in honoring this significant accomplishment.

Let us pray.

Eternal Spirit, who has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in heavenly places, we give reverence to Your holy Name. Thank You for choosing us to labor for liberty during these challenging times. Lord, keep us from the temptations that would thwart our effectiveness as You deliver us from evil. Use our lawmakers to lift the burdens of the lost, last, lonely, and least, bringing deliverance to captives and permitting the oppressed to be unshackled. PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The President pro tempore led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority whip is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, Senator REID, the majority leader, is absent today. I will be acting in his place. Senator REID called me this morning. He sounded good. We look forward to his speedy recovery.

Following my remarks and those of the Republican leader, the Senate will resume executive session to consider the nomination of Alejandro Mayorkas to be Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security postcloture.

The next hour will be equally divided and controlled between Senators CARPER and COBURN. There will be six roll-call votes at approximately 10:15 a.m.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONNOMINATION OF ALEJANDRO NICHOLAS MAYORKAS TO BE DEPUTY SECRETARY OF HOMELAND SECURITY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the following nomination which the clerk will report.

The bill clerk read the nomination of Alejandro Nicholas Mayorkas, of the District of Columbia, to be Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will be 1 hour of debate on the nomination equally divided and controlled between the Senator from Delaware Mr. CARPER and the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. COBURN or their designees.

Who seeks recognition? The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Mr. President, I will speak very briefly. Then I would like to yield to Senator LEAHY for some comments he would like to make on the President's nominee to be our next Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security. The Senator has known Mr. Mayorkas for a number of years, worked very closely with him through his committee's oversight of the EB-5 program.

I am delighted he is going to take the floor and move from presiding to speaking. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. HIRONO.) The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank my friend from Delaware. You know, the Department of Homeland Security is the leading agency for many of the pressing issues facing our Nation, from providing disaster relief to protecting our borders. The agency needs a full complement of leaders. That is why I am glad the Senate is considering the nomination of Alejandro Mayorkas to be Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security.

I want to thank the chairman of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, Senator CARPER, for pushing forward with this nomination. Alejandro Mayorkas currently serves as the Director of USCIS, the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, the agency that makes the immigration system work.

Director Mayorkas has made it, by every analysis, a stronger and better functioning agency. It is unfortunate that in these partisan times Director Mayorkas' nomination has been the subject of unfair and partisan attacks.

It is wrong that some have tried to create controversy about him even before his confirmation hearing occurred in the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee.

The attacks were made even less credible by the conduct of the former DHS deputy inspector general who was forced to resign in the face of allegations of serious misconduct, a person who frankly has no credibility in my mind because of the egregious and inexcusable things he did while serving in this role.

This former deputy inspector general, Charles Edwards, on the eve of Director Mayorkas' confirmation hearing authorized the transmittal of an email to a Republican Senate office that contained sensitive information about an ongoing investigation involving Director Mayorkas.

One thing that both Republicans and Democrats should agree upon is that this conduct is wrong. I believe it is a clear violation of the law. It is something that should be condemned no matter who did it. Of course, the timing of the transmittal raised serious questions about the motivation for its disclosure.

Inspectors general are supposed to be way above politics. Well, guess what happened? The email authorized by this former and now disgraced deputy inspector general was published shortly after its transmittal on the Web site of a Republican candidate for Governor. Come on. This is wrong. Why would a Virginia gubernatorial candidate care about an investigation being conducted by the Office of Inspector General for the Department of Homeland Security? Well, because some of the anonymous allegations repeated in that email by the Office of Inspector General involved claims that Director Mayorkas intervened in an immigration matter for Terry McAuliffe, the governor-elect of Virginia. It was obvious this was done for political motives, not to make Homeland Security a better department.

Director Mayorkas, to his credit, has always put the interests of USCIS ahead of his own. He has made tough decisions to make that agency better. Sometimes tough decisions are not popular but needed. He made the decisions that were best for the country. He has brought significant resources to bear in the EB-5 Regional Center program.

Incidentally, the recommendations that he made to improve the EB-5 program were in a bill before the Senate Judiciary Committee on comprehensive immigration reform, a bill that passed the Senate in June. Every single Republican, and every single Democrat, voted for those recommendations in the committee. Now, we have been waiting for the House to pass this important legislation. But in the meantime, Director Mayorkas has worked to ensure the program's integrity. He has acted to make sure the agency's decisions are correct under the controlling law and regulations. The suggestion that Director Mayorkas would risk his reputation and his credibility by improperly intervening in a single immigration case, out of thousands his agency handles every year, is absurd.

I remember during the consideration of comprehensive immigration reform in the Judiciary Committee—the former ranking member, Senator SESSIONS, praised my amendment to improve the EB-5 program following the recommendations of Director Mayorkas. These reforms contained a host of improvements to provide USCIS with strong oversight tools, security enhancements, and anti-fraud provisions. In fact, 68 Senators, Republicans and Democrats, voted for the comprehensive reform bill which had the EB-5 program improvements in it. Now, some have said here on the floor yesterday that we could make reforms to the EB-5 program this very day.

I would respond that the Senate voted for it earlier this year. I appreciate those Senators who want these EB-5 reforms for having voted for them back in June. I have seen no evidence that those Senators, who put such faith in the former Deputy Inspector General's flawed investigation, have asked the tough questions necessary to test the integrity of that investigation.

Instead of considering the circumstances of the disgraced former Deputy Inspector General's disclosure, and taking the opportunity to ask tough questions of Director Mayorkas at his confirmation hearing, Republican Senators on the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee instead decided to boycott that hearing. And when Chairman CARPER scheduled a Committee business meeting to vote on Director Mayorkas' nomination, all Republican senators but two failed to attend that meeting. This is unfortunate and in my view, an abdication of our responsibility to evaluate the President's nominees.

As senators, we are obligated to ask the tough questions of all nominees, but it is also important that we carefully consider the source and motivations behind any allegations against those nominees. Regarding the immigration case about which Director Mayorkas is accused of acting improperly, it is clear in emails that he wrote, which have been publicly disclosed, that he asserts his inability to become involved in any specific case. The emails that have been disclosed paint a picture of an agency director who took great pains to avoid any appearance of favoritism or impropriety.

I would urge my colleagues to review carefully, and in context, that which has been disclosed. Furthermore, the Senate should consider the reliability of those who refused to meet with Democratic staff on the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee to discuss their allegations.

Come on. Let's stop playing political games with this. We have a good person, a person we should be thankful is willing to serve this country, a person who has been the subject of lies and smears. Director Mayorkas will serve the Department of Homeland Security, and the American people, honorably. Let's vindicate this person. Let's put him to work for the good of the country.

I thank the distinguished chairman from Delaware for his work on this.

Mr. CARPER. I thank the Senator as chairman of the Judiciary Committee for the many years working on the EB-5 program to make sure it fulfills its potential.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. CARPER. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. Madam President, the unfortunate thing is we have a disagreement on the precedents of the Senate. We just had the President pro tempore of the Senate say that there were lies and smears. Not one member of the minority voted against Mr. Mayorkas in his confirmation hearing.

They all voted "present." The reason they did that was for a very important reason. The President pro tempore of the Senate did not mention the fact that there still—regardless of all of those things, there is still an ongoing investigation.

Never before in the history of the Senate has a position at this level been approved with an ongoing investigation. Facts are stubborn. I would like for him to tell me what the lies and smears are, that he claims, politically we have made. We have made no such claims.

What we have said is the ICE review of this program said it should be eliminated. It happened to have been authored by the President pro tempore. We had the majority whip on Wednesday night saying the following:

My colleague, Senator Tom Carper, chairman of this committee has gone to extraordinary lengths to investigate every allegation—

Is that right? Every allegation? They do not even know what the allegations are because we are not privy to them.—to answer every question, and to be there to work with the other side of the aisle to try to resolve any problems that they have with this nomination. Sadly, it has not been successful because we do not know what the claims are. We think we know. We also have the chairman of the committee, before he ever heard the specifics of any complaint by whistleblowers demeaning those very whistleblowers and describing their words as "rumors and innuendo"—people who put their jobs on the line to report.

Then he claims they will not meet with him, even though he has asked them to meet twice. I cannot blame them, because he has already dismissed any credibility that they have.

We should wait for this investigation to be completed. I know we are not going to; we are going to roll this right through here. It is a disservice to Mr. Mayorkas. It is a disservice to the American people. It is a disservice to this body. All that I have heard from people who know Mr. Mayorkas are positive things. It is positive, but a legitimate investigation is ongoing.

I would make this other point: The administration knew that there was an ongoing IG investigation, and it failed to inform the chairman and failed to inform the ranking member when they sent his nomination over. Why is that? Why would they not tell us that? Was it just an oversight, or did they intend for us not to know?

The worst thing that comes about because of this nomination moving forward is the relationship and the trust that has gone from our committee. The difficulties going forward will be major because things have been implied that I, personally, am doing things for a political purpose rather than from a principled basis. There is no nominee who is under an investigation that I will ever meet with before that investigation is cleared.

The other claim that has been made is we wouldn't meet with Mr. Mayorkas because we didn't want to know the truth. The fact is we didn't want to prejudice our position without the knowledge of the facts, but that has not kept some in this body from claiming we had a motive other than what we have stated. Therefore, all our motives, rather than finding out the truth, our motives are that it has to be political.

I reject that. I take great offense at that.

I have no doubt that Mr. Mayorkas will be confirmed today.

The question I have is if, in fact, the IG investigation finds credible findings of wrongdoing or undue influence or impropriety, what then? How effective is this going to be?

I am not saying they will find it; I don't know. But we certainly know. The extent of the chairman's investigation is meeting with the nominee—and I am sure he is an honorable man. But my duty as a Senator is to know the facts, not to know my feelings, and we can't do that at this time. We are precluded from doing that.

Therefore, we are going to approve someone without full knowledge. We will not be able to ably give our advice and consent because we know there are unanswered questions. If those unanswered questions fall to the side that says Mr. Mayorkas has done nothing wrong, then he will be there, but he will be there in less full power and less confidence than he would have had otherwise.

There have been 20 nominees that have come through our committee. I have voted against only one—only one. I have been a good partner for the administration in moving their nominees. But to ask us to ignore what might be potential critical information is to ask us to abandon our duty of advice and consent.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana, Ms. LANDRIEU.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

Ms. LANDRIEU. It is unfortunate that this situation has occurred. What is most unfortunate is it casts a poor light on a very extraordinary individual, someone who I have had the privilege to know very well for the last several years. It pains me and many Members of this body who know Ali Mayorkas personally and know of his extraordinary service to the United States of America to date that his name would be dragged through the mud like this.

I know the Senator from Oklahoma has been sincere in many of his efforts to streamline our government, to make it more efficient. While there have been individuals on the other side who have used the seats they have been privileged to gain in not the most admirable way, he is not one of them. I do not have any poor feelings or disappointment in him personally.

I think what has happened is a complete breakdown of trust on all sides, which has caused very extraordinary measures to be taken, because from our perspective, from my perspective, if a candidate such as this who has already been confirmed twice by the Senate, who served our country already as a U.S. attorney with the highest credentials prosecuting criminal cases and criminal activity that Senator COBURN and Senator CARPER have spent a career themselves pushing back so our government can be better, more transparent, and more honest, then I don't know where we go from here. I truly don't.

I do know this gentleman was willing to meet with anyone to try to clear up any misinformation. In fact, several Republicans, at my request—my specific personal request—met with him and came away with amazing opinions, high opinions of him when they asked him questions and he answered.

There is a lot of evidence to suggest the "investigation" against him is bogus, is being conducted for inappropriate reasons. Sometimes these things happen in government, and it is our job to sort through.

Senator CARPER as chairman—I know because I serve on the committee as well—tried for months and months to get meetings to try to clear this up. We couldn't move forward in any way.

Should this man's name be ruined because there is not cooperation in the Senate for the first time in many decades? I have been here almost 20 years. I have never seen it like this and it is not this gentleman's fault.

I know his wife. I know his two girls. They have been to my office. I know his family. I have met his brothers. This is very painful to his family, and it is just not responsible.

It is not only about Director Mayorkas—Ali Mayorkas and his family, the Mayorkas family—it is about thousands of good people out there who would love to serve in this government despite the fact that many people on the other side think it is the worst thing ever created in the history of man. That is their view. It happens to be one of the greatest creations of man, with divine help, but we cannot convince them of that.

There are thousands of people who would want to serve in our government. But after listening to speeches that Mr. COBURN just gave or Mr. GRASSLEY, the Senator from Iowa, or the Senator from Oklahoma or others, who would want to put their families through this? No one.

Just because there is a group of people over there who despise the government—for whatever reason, I don't know—they shouldn't take their anger out on the individuals trying to make it better and fix what is broken. The EB-5 Program was broken way before Director Mayorkas had the responsibility to try to fix it, and he is only one human being. We all have the responsibility to fix this program.

To blame him and to drag his family through this after an extraordinary career prosecuting crime, I understand—and Senator CARPER will speak more to this—but when the people he worked with in the past needed someone to head something such as the integrity committee, they would choose him quite often. He has run the integrity committees in places where he has worked. That is a great honor.

In conclusion, now he comes up in one of the most important departments of the whole government, Homeland Security—which TOM CARPER authorizes as chair, and I fund to the best of my ability, with all sorts of attacks to our budget, to try to provide resources to this agency—and this gentleman whom we should be thanking every day for wanting to step up and take this job has to be dragged through this.

I make no apologies for the rules changes that made this possible. I am sorry we were unable to convince people on the other side of his outstanding integrity and that the investigation against him is bogus, personal, and should be dismissed. The IG who was in charge of it has resigned under a cloud. That doesn't seem to make any difference to them.

I am proud to put my name and my vote behind this nominee who I know will do an exceedingly fabulous job for this country in a very important role we need.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. I wish to thank the Senator from Louisiana for that heartfelt, passionate endorsement of Ali Mayorkas' nomination.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. CARPER. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. I appreciate the comments of my colleague from Louisiana. It goes right to the point. She may be 100 percent right, but we do not know the facts. What we have is testimony from a lot of people that he is a fine man, but we don't know the facts. We say we do, but we don't. Therefore, we are asking this body to make a judgment without the knowledge. It goes against the very charge we have for advice and consent.

We besmirch all of the 650 people who work for this IG—who has not been associated with this case in over a month, in terms of personally directing it. We besmirch all those other people.

Were there credible accusations made? There must have been. There must have been. Maybe they are not accurate. They are allegations, but they should be cleared up and they should be cleared up for Mr. Mayorkas' sake so that when he takes this position, it is not under a cloud and he is totally exonerated. But we are going to go ahead anyway. Regardless of our experience, facts still count.

I have raised three daughters. They are in their forties and late thirties, and I love them dearly. They have great integrity, but they have made mistakes in their lives. They have made poor judgments. It does not mean they are not great individuals, but they have made mistakes.

What the Senator is saying is cover your ears and cover your eyes and don't see mistakes that were made. Make the judgment without that knowledge. I have no doubt the words my colleague from Louisiana spoke were true in terms of her experience, but the Senator wasn't there. The Senator didn't know.

There are six individuals who have put their jobs on the line to make allegations that have to be disproved by nonbiased people who work at the inspector general's office.

What we are saying today is, You are not capable. You don't have the quality or the integrity to make a fair decision on this issue and so we are going to vote with that. It is amazing how good we are at looking into the crystal ball to know the truth without knowing the facts.

The vote is going to be based on the faith that we think Mr. Mayorkas has done nothing wrong. I hope that is true. I would have loved to be able to have voted for him knowing the facts, fulfilling my constitutional duty, but the Senator precludes that. I have no choice but to oppose the nomination, not because I don't know Mr. Mayorkas but because I don't have the facts.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 15½ minutes remaining.

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. CARPER. Our leadership is the most important element of any organization, be it a public or private organization, a business, school, a military unit, an athletic team. Leadership is key in everything.

The Department of Homeland Security, which protects us from all kinds of attacks—foreign and domestic, man-made and natural—needs leadership. They need confirmed Senate leadership. They haven't had it for months.

I am going to thank my colleagues who voted this week to confirm Jeh Johnson's nomination as the Secretary of this Department. He will be sworn in next week, thank God. He needs a team. On top of that team he needs Ali Mayorkas to be the Deputy Secretary.

Those are not only my words or the words of Senator LANDRIEU or Senator LEAHY or Senator FEINSTEIN. We received dozens of letters from people who know him. We know these names. We know their faces. We know their reputation. Some are Democrat and some are Republican. A number of them have helped lead the Department of Homeland Security—lead it.

This is a vacancy we are trying to fill. Jane Holl Lute is the last Deputy who stepped down 6 or 8 months ago. She literally oversaw his work and she was his boss, if you will. She thinks the world of him, not only in a role he served but as a guy who can step in and fill the shoes she used to fill.

I want to talk about this investigation. There are two tracks we are going down here. One is an investigation that was launched in September of 2012 by the IG—the OIG for the Department of Homeland Security—in 2012, 15 months ago. How did we find out about it? We found out about it through a leak, information leaked by the office to our friends on the other side 3 days before the hearing was supposed to occur.

We asked to talk to folks who came forward as whistleblowers. We asked for them to talk to the minority. We have asked and asked and asked and have never been given the chance to talk to them to find out what are their allegations, what is their story. Let's hear it. By the same token, they have refused to turn to the one person who knows the most about what is going on in this agency for the last 4 years—Ali Mayorkas—to say: You have been accused of this. Under our system of justice in this country the accused actually has a chance to defend himself, and when he did—we had a hearing—they didn't show up. They won't meet with him either.

So here is the situation. We have people who may be very good people. We don't know them, we don't know their names, and we don't know what they are saying. We just know we haven't had a chance to meet with them, and we know the one guy who is being accused here hasn't had a chance to give his story to those who are accusing him. Is that fair? I don't think so. I don't think so.

So we had that hearing at the end of July and no Republicans came. We put every tough question we could to Mr. Mayorkas, under oath, and he came through. He said about this case involving Terry McAuliffe that Mr. McAuliffe and his company wanted something; they didn't get it. The guy who really made the decision, who works for Ali Mayorkas, basically said—Mr. Rhew—that he made the decision. He made the decision. He was not pressured to make the decision. He ruled against Terry McAuliffe's company. End of case.

Here we are at the end of July. We have the hearing and the Republicans don't come. Dr. COBURN joined me in a letter to the Inspector General and said: Please, provide the resources to expedite and make a priority of this investigation. They were 9 months into that investigation at that time. That was the end of July. In August, we reached out and said, through staff: What kind of assets, what kind of priority are you giving this case? They had three people working on it. They have 650 employees in this office—650—and they had 3 full-time people working on it, an investigator and two research assistants. So we go into August, and they say we need a couple more months. A couple more months was October. Dr. COBURN and I sent another letter to the IG and said: How are we doing? Let's provide some priority to this, and let's get to the bottom of this.

That was in October. Two weeks ago, minority staff and majority staff from the committee had a phone conversation with the OIG's office and said: How are we doing? They said: There is no evidence of any criminal wrongdoing by anybody—not by Mr.

Mayorkas, not by anybody at DHS—but we are not done yet. We need several more months. Maybe come back in February or March.

In the meantime, the Department of Homeland Security doesn't have the leadership it needs—at least confirmed by us. How long are we going to wait? The terrorists aren't going to wait. The ones in foreign countries aren't going to wait. The ones in this country aren't going to wait. We need leadership. It is the key for everything—everything.

There is another audit that has been going on as well by the IG—the same IG—of the EB-5 program. I'm an old Governor—here we have an old State treasurer. We used to get audits all the time in State government. Auditors came in to do audits. It drove me crazy when the auditor would come in, make an audit for sometime in the past, and refuse to acknowledge that the department or the agency being audited had actually fixed those problems and submitted an audit that pretends like nothing is different. You have seen this. Senator DURBIN has seen this. I have seen this. It drove me crazy.

We have an audit that is going to be released, I think publicly in a day or 2, that has been shared with us in the Senate this week, and there are really four recommendations. As it turns out, of those four recommendations one of them needs the Congress to do something. We need to pass a law. Ali Mayorkas, 18 months ago said to the Judiciary Committee—to Senator LEAHY, Senator GRASSLEY: In order for us to make sure there is not fraud in the EB-5 program, to make sure there are not national security concerns, we need you—Congress—to do something about it.

When they reauthorized the EB-5 program in 2012, guess what. They didn't take his recommendations—none of them. This year we were doing immigration reform in committee—Senator DURBIN was one of the key players there—and when we did it, PAT LEAHY, chairman of the committee, made sure those recommendations were actually included in the immigration reform law—the recommendations from Ali Mayorkas—and they are in the immigration reform bill. We voted for them. It is over in the House now. It is sitting there gathering dust, unfortunately.

If Senator LEAHY doesn't introduce as a stand-alone bill those provisions allowing the EB-5 program to have the kind of governance it needs through the USCIS agency, if he doesn't do it, I said to him, I will introduce the legislation myself. I hope we will have a lot of cosponsors.

There are four recommendations. One of them needs us to do something in order for it to occur. The other two are either acknowledged, completed or done. On the other one, we just are in disagreement. It is outside the scope of the law. That is the audit. That is the audit.

So, my friends, I just want to say this: This is not a criminal investigation. The things Terry McAuliffe and his company sought were denied. The one person within the agency who has actually worked on these investigations and worked on these EB-5 programs has come forward and said: Look, Mayorkas did nothing wrong. I decided. I decided against Mr. McAuliffe's company and Mr. Mayorkas stayed out of my way.

We have endorsements. We don't know who the detractors are of Mr. Mayorkas. I wish we did, and I wish we had a chance to talk to them. We are never going to have a chance. I wish my friends on the other side had taken the time to talk to Mr. Mayorkas to say: Listen, this is what you are accused of. The Democrats don't know what you are accused of, but this is what we have been told by these six people. What is your story? What is your story?

Whatever happened to the Golden Rule? What happened to the idea that justice delayed is justice denied? You know, Mr. Mayorkas, as Senator LANDRIEU said, has a wife, they have two kids. They have a life to live. We have put them through hell for months. What kind of message does this send to other people, other agency leaders who go in and take on an agency that is in trouble, that has problems and needs to be fixed, needs to be shaken up? That person goes in and does it and gets whistleblowers or complaints out of it as a result? What do we say to other leaders who go into agencies that are in trouble and need to be shaken up, to those who are willing to get people to do things differently? What do we say to them? Don't do it; don't rock the boat; just let things slide? Is that the message we want to send? I don't think so.

We will not have a chance on this side to hear from those six people, but I tell you the other people who work in that agency had a chance to say something about the way they feel about how their agency is going. As my colleagues know, every year we get a report from a nonprofit organization that looks at 300 Federal agencies and asks the questions: How is morale? How do you feel about the work you are doing? One of those 300 was this agency led by Ali Mayorkas, the U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services. The Department of Homeland Security, again this year—we just got the results this week, and again this year, the worst morale in the Federal Government of any department—in our government, the worst morale. But guess what. There is one agency in this department that stood up, that stood out, because out of those 300 agencies, No. 76—the top 25 percent—No. 76 was this agency led by Mr. Mayorkas.

Another question asked of the employees: Do you feel better or worse about your senior leadership this year than last year? Since 2009, since he took over this organization in 2009, Madam President, guess what. Satisfaction with senior leadership increased by more than 20 percent. They feel better. They feel better about the senior leadership with Mr. Mayorkas than they did without his leadership.

Something is going on in that agency, folks. We are not getting the full story, but that survey that we got this week says a lot.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CARPER. Please.

Mr. DURBIN. Through the Chair, I want to ask a question of the Senator from Delaware because he has touched on an issue that is important to everyone, but especially to this Senator from Illinois.

It was 12 years ago when I introduced the DREAM Act, and it was a little over a year ago the President issued an executive order which said they would defer the deportation of those eligible under the DREAM Act, but there was also a little wrinkle to it. They said the fees we were going to collect under this DACA, they called it—this executive order—had to pay for the administration of this executive order. This is extraordinary. We were basically saying this was a pay-as-you-go effort that has drawn more than 600,000 applications and over 450,000 approvals. This went right through Mr. Mayorkas's responsibility and jurisdiction.

So I would say to the Senator from Delaware, not only is the morale good in his agency, but the job they have done is extraordinary. They were given an extraordinary responsibility, and they rose to the challenge and handled it professionally. I can tell you, with firsthand knowledge, having met with him, watched him, this man is a capable administrator, and the people who work for him—clearly, as a result of this survey—are very happy with his performance.

I would just say to the Senator from Delaware, what absolutely confuses, mystifies, and infuriates me, is the notion that unidentified people will make nonspecific charges against this man, and he is supposed to wait for month after weary month? If we talk about the basic standard of justice in America, when the government makes a charge against someone, there is a complaint—a bill of particulars. You know what the charge is, and fairness and justice requires that you can confront your accusers and hear from them the information and evidence against you.

In this situation, as best I can understand—and what my colleague has said repeatedly on the floor, I say to the chairman—is that this never took place. You have waited month after weary month for these accusers to come forward and at least tell Mr.

Mayorkas what they think he has done wrong. Their silence, their refusal to do so, speaks volumes to me.

I am sorry they didn't make their report more fully, but I think, as I said the other night on the floor, you are an honorable person. I know you, and I have worked with you for over 30 years both in the House and in the Senate. When I hear you say on the floor you do your best to be fair and bipartisan in everything, and when I hear you stand on the floor and say this man has been treated unfairly, he deserves his chance, that is what I need to hear.

I would just ask the Senator from Delaware: Has he had a chance to confront his accusers? Has your committee had a chance to even know the allegations against him at this point?

Mr. CARPER. The answer, Madam President, sadly, is no, we have not. No, we have not.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I wish to speak in support of President Obama's nominee for Deputy Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, DHS, Alejandro Mayorkas. I have known Ali for many years and am proud to have recommended him to President Clinton for the position of U.S. attorney for the Central District of California, as well as to President Obama for his current position as Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, USCIS.

The role of Deputy Secretary within the Department of Homeland Security is an important one. The Deputy Secretary is charged with overseeing the agency's efforts to counter terrorism and enhance the security and management of our borders, while facilitating trade and travel and enforcing our immigration laws. Additionally, the Deputy Secretary assists in the safeguarding and security of cyber space and provides support for national and economic security in times of disaster, in coordination with Federal, State, local, international, and private sector partners.

Mr. Mayorkas is extremely well qualified for this position and brings to this office a diverse background and set of experiences in both the private and public sectors. I am confident he will do an outstanding job as Deputy Secretary for the Department of Homeland Security, and he has my enthusiastic and unwavering support.

Born in Havana, Cuba, Mr. Mayorkas earned his B.A. with distinction from the University of California, Berkeley, in 1981. He earned his law degree from Loyola Law School in 1985. Those who have enjoyed the opportunity to work with him regard him as being highly intelligent, thoughtful, kind and compassionate, and dedicated to doing the right thing.

From 1989 to 1998, Mr. Mayorkas served as an assistant U.S. attorney for the Central District of California, where he prosecuted a wide array of Federal crimes, specializing in the prosecution of white collar-crime. Federal law enforcement agencies recognized his success with multiple awards. For example, he received commendations from FBI Director Louis Freeh for his successful prosecution of Operation PolarCap, the largest money laundering case in the Nation at the time.

He continued to distinguish himself by becoming the first U.S. attorney in the Central District of California to be appointed from within the office. Mr. Mayorkas created the Civil Rights Section in the office to prosecute hate crimes and other acts of intolerance and discrimination more effectively. He developed an innovative program to address violent crime by targeting criminals' possession of firearms, prosecuting street gangs, and at the same time developing afterschool programs to help at-risk youth discover and realize their potential. He uniquely demonstrated the ability to simultaneously be firm with criminals, protective of the innocent, and supportive and empowering to our future leaders.

As supported by the many law enforcement and community awards he received during his tenure as U.S. attorney, Mr. Mayorkas' accomplishments extended beyond his district. He successfully expanded his office's community outreach programs and cooperation with international players in the fight against crime. He directly resolved cases while also overseeing hundreds of attorneys addressing immigration matters, which included complex and sensitive prosecution of individuals and rings producing false immigration documents, illegal reentry cases, and alien smuggling conspiracies.

The Administrator for the Drug Enforcement Administration, Michele Leonhart, noted that "he was instrumental in broadening collaboration between law enforcement agencies to address violent crime and expanded cooperation with other nations to address the growing threat of transnational crime." Combined with his prosecuting white collar crime, public corruption, computer-related crime, and international money laundering, she wrote that such a "broad base of experience . . . provides him with a unique perspective on threats to national security."

Mr. Mayorkas further developed his sharp legal skills and management experience as a Partner at O'Melveny & Myers, from 2001 to 2009, where he represented companies in high-profile and sensitive government enforcement cases. He was recognized by his worldwide firm with an annual award for "leadership, excellence and citizenship," and was named by the National Law Journal as one of the "50 Most Influential Minority Lawyers in America" in 2008.

Since his confirmation as Director of USCIS 4 years ago in 2009, he has continued to exert his positive influence through leadership, excellence, and citizenship in accomplishing the agency's mission. He has improved the immigration services and policies of USCIS by realigning its priorities for a modern-day America that seeks to preserve its legacy as a nation of immigrants while ensuring national security and public safety—no easy task.

Throughout his current role as Director of USCIS, he has successfully preserved and increased the integrity of our immigration laws by decreasing fraud and bringing accountability to our immigration system. For example, Mr. Mayorkas has worked to secure our Nation's criminal and immigration laws in the face of increasing gang and border violence.

As technology advances, so too have our needs to prevent fraud and to safeguard immigration documents from tampering; Mr. Mayorkas has confronted that challenge by enhancing the scope and frequency of national security vetting of applicants for immigration benefits and by redesigning immigration documentation with enhanced security features.

Simultaneously, Mr. Mayorkas has led USCIS in the other half of its mission—to preserve the role of America as a just nation that treats immigrants at our shores humanely and with an eye towards the potential they bring to our nation.

He ensured the prompt review of applications of victims of trafficking and domestic violence so that they may begin to pick up the pieces and move forward in their lives. Mr. Mayorkas has also improved the immigration program for victims of crime who cooperate with law enforcement in investigation and prosecutions.

To combat notario fraud and other unscrupulous practices that undermine the integrity of the immigration system, Mr. Mayorkas launched the unauthorized practice of immigration law initiative. It is a nationwide collaborative effort with Federal, State, and municipal agencies and enforcement authorities that works to raise awareness among immigrant communities and to investigate and prosecute wrongdoers.

After the 2010 earthquake in Haiti, he developed and implemented a humanitarian parole program on an emergency basis to save orphans and unite children with their adoptive families here.

Significantly, upon President Obama's directive to grant deferred action to immigrants who were brought to this country as children and who seek to legally remain in the United States, Mr. Mayorkas swiftly implemented the deferred action for childhood arrivals initiative in 60 days. In less than 1 year, over half a million people have applied to remain in the United States, the only home they have known.

He also boldly realigned the agency's organizational structure, including 246 offices and facilities worldwide, to more accurately serve key priorities and achieve efficiency. For example, his stringent budget reviews resulted in cost-saving measures of $160 million in budget cuts for the fiscal year 2010.

I recognize that my colleagues have raised concerns about the EB-5 program in connection with Mr. Mayorkas' nomination.

I actually believe that Mr. Mayorkas' actions to improve the integrity of the EB-5 program are a reason to support his nomination. They show that, when Mr. Mayorkas sees a systemic issue requiring action, he will figure out what to do and then do everything possible within the confines of the law to fix it.

As my colleagues know, the EB-5 program essentially allows a foreign investor to obtain a conditional green card by investing $500,000 or $1 million in a U.S. business. The conditions can be removed if, after 2 years, the individual shows 10 jobs have been created by the investment.

Because of the various economic issues involved in adjudicating EB-5 applications—which can run for thousands of pages—the EB-5 program has been called the most complex program USCIS administers.

I will say up front: I have my own serious concerns about this program. I am concerned about the potential for fraud, against both foreign and domestic investors. I am concerned that a business created with this money may not turn out to be legitimate, and as chairman of the Intelligence Committee, I know that certain immigration programs may be ripe for exploitation.

I look forward to the opportunity, before the EB-5 program requires our reauthorization in 2015, to bolstering the security of this program.

But none of that has anything to do with this nomination. Mr. Mayorkas was required by law, as Director of USCIS, to administer the EB-5 program.

As Director, Mr. Mayorkas saw flaws in the program—flaws in the agency's ability to vet participants in the program, and flaws in the agency's ability to do the economic analysis necessary. So, Mr. Mayorkas set about fixing them. For example:

Routine security checks of foreign investor applicants and principals of regional centers are now done.

Regional centers now annually must show they meet the eligibility requirements and update USCIS on new lines of business. More vetting is conducted with these annual filings.

Mr. Mayorkas brought on financial experts and business lawyers, who help review business documents associated with applications.

The program has been moved entirely to DC with specialized adjudicatory officers and antifraud staff. The program is now close to the investigative, intelligence, and financial communities that help detect suspicious financial activity.

I agree with many on the Democratic and Republican sides of the aisle that the EB-5 program must be reformed. I supported Chairman LEAHY's amendment to the immigration bill to do that, and I believe further legislative action will be needed to make sure that, if this program is reauthorized, it is secure.

But I also believe that Mr. Mayorkas has performed his job as Director of USCIS admirably, including by making the EB-5 program more secure. That is a reason to support his nomination.

Let me conclude by saying that this nominee has my strong support. He is a fine individual whom I have known for a very long time. He impressed me as U.S. attorney, and he has continued to do so as Director of USCIS.

He understands the immigration system and the many other issues, like transnational drug trafficking and national security, that the leaders of the Department of Homeland Security must face. And I believe he will make an outstanding Deputy Secretary.

I recognize there is an investigation by the inspector general's office at DHS, but the OIG confirmed that "there is no indication of criminal activity" on Mr. Mayorkas' part. There has been a significant delay in this investigation, and it now appears from press reports that the inspector general, who himself was being investigated, has resigned.

DHS needs its leaders confirmed. It cannot wait for months and months, which it has done already. I do not believe that in this case—which involves a distinguished nominee who has my confidence—that confirmation should be delayed. Rather, we need to confirm a leader who understands our complicated immigration laws and policies and who can knowledgeably help us navigate and ultimately implement comprehensive immigration reform. He has this needed knowledge and ability.

I urge my colleagues to support Mr. Mayorkas.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, the Department of Homeland Security is the leading agency for some of the most pressing issues facing our Nation, from providing disaster relief to protecting our borders. To serve the American people, this agency needs a full complement of leaders, and that is why I am glad the Senate is considering the nomination of Alejandro Mayorkas to be Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security. I commend Senator CARPER, chairman of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee, for making his nomination to this important position a priority for the committee and getting his nomination to the Senate.

Alejandro Mayorkas currently serves as Director of U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services, USCIS. This is the agency that makes our immigration system work, and Director Mayorkas has made it a stronger, better functioning agency. His expertise on immigration issues will help him in his new role, where he is sure to improve coordination within the Department. Those Senators who claim to care about protecting our borders and improving our broken immigration system should support this nomination, just as they should call on the House to pass comprehensive immigration reform as we did here in the Senate earlier this year.

It is unfortunate that Director Mayorkas' nomination has been the subject of unfair and partisan attacks, and it is wrong that some tried to create controversy about Director Mayorkas even before his confirmation hearing occurred in the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee. The attacks mounted against Director Mayorkas are made even less credible by the conduct of the former DHS deputy inspector general, who was forced to resign in the face of allegations of serious misconduct.

On the eve of Director Mayorkas' confirmation hearing, this former deputy inspector general, Charles Edwards, authorized the transmittal of an email to a Republican Senate office that contained sensitive information about an ongoing investigation involving Director Mayorkas. The timing of its transmittal raised serious questions about the motivation for its disclosure. Then, the email authorized by the former deputy inspector general was published shortly after its transmittal on the web site of a Republican candidate for Governor of Virginia. Why would a Virginia gubernatorial candidate care about an investigation being conducted by the Office of Inspector General for the Department of Homeland Security? Because some of the anonymous allegations repeated in that email by the Office of Inspector General involved claims that Director Mayorkas intervened in an immigration matter for Terry McAuliffe, the Governor-elect of Virginia. What is worse, the former inspector general had received these anonymous allegations in September of 2012, yet only disclosed them publicly just days before Director Mayorkas was scheduled to appear before the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee.

Director Mayorkas' professional integrity further undermines these bogus allegations. Alejandro Mayorkas served as an assistant U.S. attorney and as the U.S. attorney for Southern California, posts he held during the course of a decade. Where he has made mistakes, he has taken responsibility. In my experiences with him while he has served as Director of USCIS, Director Mayorkas has put the interests of USCIS and those it serves at the forefront. He has made tough decisions to make that agency better—decisions that are sometimes not popular with agency employees but decisions that put the institution first. He has brought significant resources to bear on the EB-5 regional center program, a program that a bipartisan majority of this Senate supported when we passed comprehensive immigration reform in June. While the House has failed to pass this important legislation that includes meaningful improvements to the EB-5 program, Director Mayorkas did not let up on his efforts to ensure the program's integrity. He has acted to make sure the agency's decisions are correct under the controlling law and regulations. The suggestion that Director Mayorkas would risk his reputation and his credibility by improperly intervening in a single immigration case, out of thousands his agency handles every year, is absurd.

Those who have concerns about the integrity of the EB-5 regional center should remember that in May of this year, the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously approved broad reforms to the EB-5 program during the committee's consideration of comprehensive immigration reform. These reforms, which received praise from the Judiciary Committee's former ranking member, Senator SESSIONS, contained a host of improvements recommended by Director Mayorkas and other administration officials to provide strong oversight tools, security enhancements, and antifraud provisions. In June, 68 Senators voted in favor of the comprehensive reform bill, of which my EB-5 reforms were a part. Senators on both sides of the aisle who have supported this program know it creates jobs in American communities and is an important and viable source of capital investment for many American entrepreneurs. Senator GRASSLEY said on the Senate floor earlier this week that we could make reforms to this program "this very day." I would respond that the Senate has voted to make them already this year, and I was glad to have his support for my strong reforms in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Those who say that the Senate should not approve Director Mayorkas' nomination because a scandal-plagued and now-resigned deputy inspector general sat on allegations made against Director Mayorkas for 10 months before disclosing them in a highly improper way days before Director Mayorkas' confirmation hearing should carefully consider whether these circumstances merit our faith that the investigation is truly impartial or legitimate. I have seen no evidence that those Senators who put such faith in the former deputy inspector general's flawed investigation have asked the tough questions necessary to test the integrity of that investigation. Instead of considering the circumstances of the former deputy inspector general's disclosure, and taking the opportunity to ask tough questions of Director Mayorkas at his confirmation hearing, Republican Senators on the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee decided to boycott that hearing. And when Chairman CARPER scheduled a committee business meeting to vote on Director Mayorkas' nomination, all Republican Senators but two failed to attend that meeting. This is unfortunate and, in my view, an abdication of our responsibility to evaluate the President's nominees independently.

As Senators, we are obligated to ask the tough questions of all nominees, but it is also important that we carefully consider the source and motivations behind any allegations against those nominees.

Regarding the immigration case about which Director Mayorkas is accused of acting improperly, it is clear in emails that he wrote which have been publicly disclosed, that he asserts his inability to become involved in any specific case. The emails that have been disclosed paint a picture of an agency director who took great pains to avoid any appearance of favoritism or impropriety. I would urge my colleagues to review carefully, and in context, that which has been disclosed. Finally, it is troubling that the individuals who have brought allegations to Republican Senators against this nominee would not even agree to meet with Chairman CARPER or his staff. The Senate should consider the reliability of those who have made allegations but are unwilling to let those allegations be fully considered.

I have every reason to believe that Director Mayorkas will serve the Department of Homeland Security and the American people honorably. I have no doubt about the quality of his character or his integrity as a public official. And I regret that his nomination has been so needlessly politicized. Alejandro Mayorkas deserves an up-or-down vote and the support of the Senate.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. CARPER. Madam President, my friend Senator DURBIN, from Springfield, IL, Land of Lincoln, reminds me as I close here this morning of something Lincoln once said. He was meeting with his Cabinet during the heart of the Civil War. Things had started to turn for the better for the Union. The Union leader on the military side was a guy named Grant. He allegedly liked to drink, a lot. Some of the folks on the President's cabinet didn't like him. They said: Mr. President, we need to get rid of Grant. He is not the kind of guy we want to have leading our forces.

Grant had led a reversal of fortune, so that the Union having been on the losing side ended up on the winning side again and again. Lincoln looked at his Cabinet, and he said these words, and I paraphrase them: Find out what Grant is drinking, and give it to the rest of my generals.

Rather than criticize or hang out to dry a leader of an agency who has turned it around, who enjoys the broad support of the folks within his agency; rather than criticize him and finding fault and leaving him out there unable to defend himself against unknown accusations, we should find out—in the words of Lincoln—what Grant is drinking. In this case we should find out what Mayorkas is doing, what has he done to turn around an agency and make sure the other people who come into positions of authority are taking of the same beverage.

With that, I yield back the remainder of my time, and I yield the floor.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, the unanimous consent agreement is that we would move to this vote on the Mayorkas nomination following the debate. This debate has ended a little earlier than we anticipated. This first roll-call, we are going to accommodate Members and leave it open so they have a chance. But because most are anxious, we are hoping Members come to the floor early, vote, and we can start the series of votes agreed to.

Mr. COBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Alejandro Nicholas Mayorkas, of the District of Columbia, to be Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security?

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. DURBIN. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. REID) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Nevada (Mr. REID) would vote "aye."

Mr. CORNYN. The following Senators are necessarily absent: the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. ALEXANDER), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FLAKE), the Senator from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON), and the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. JOHANNES).

Further, if present and voting, the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. ALEXANDER) would have voted "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 54, nays 41, as follows:

NOMINATION OF BRIAN J. DAVIS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, today we consider the nomination of Brian Davis to be a District Court Judge for the Middle District of Florida. I will vote for him today (although there has been some controversy surrounding his nomination). I wish to take a minute to discuss the nomination.

Judge Davis made a number of controversial remarks a few years ago. During his hearing last Congress, Judge Davis was asked to provide some clarification regarding those comments. After carefully reviewing his answers from the hearing, many of us concluded that they didn't provide the clarity that we had hoped he would provide. For that reason, following his hearing, I asked Judge Davis some follow-up questions for the RECORD, hoping to get the clarity, in writing, that I didn't hear him provide during his hearing.

Unfortunately, after reviewing his written answers, I concluded that Judge Davis didn't fully appreciate why many found his comments so troubling. For instance, when I asked him about these statements he wrote that a "number of my statements could be misunderstood", but he neither apologized for them nor said anything to demonstrate that he fully appreciated why his comments were so problematic.

As a result, in the last Congress I reluctantly opposed his nomination.

Judge Davis, of course, was renominated this Congress. On September 12th, he submitted a letter to the Florida Senators.

In that letter, Judge Davis apologized for his comments—without qualification.

He wrote, "I believe that several of the statements I made in the past were inappropriate and improper." He went on to write, "I apologize for any inappropriate statements and deeply recognize the harm that they could cause if they gave the misimpression that I am anything other than impartial or that I maintain any bias or prejudice."

As I wrote to Judge Davis in a follow-up letter on September 25th, unlike the last Congress, I believe the apology Judge Davis transmitted on September 12 for those comments was without qualification. Therefore, in my view, it demonstrated both courage and humility.

In my letter to Judge Davis, I asked him simply to confirm that he was apologizing for his comments regarding Dr. Henry Foster, Dr. Joycelyn Elders, and Justice Thomas.

In a follow-up letter he wrote to me on September 26, he confirmed those were the "inappropriate comments" he referenced in his letter to the Florida Senators.

I ask consent that both my letter to Judge Davis, and his response, be made part of the RECORD.

I have given this nomination a great deal of consideration. I believe Judge Davis has taken steps this Congress that, in my view, he didn't appear willing to take last Congress. Taking this into consideration, together with the fact that he enjoys the support of his home State Senators, I am willing to give Judge Davis the benefit of the doubt and will support his nomination today.

I yield the floor.

Washington, DC, September 25, 2013.

Judge BRIAN J. DAVIS,
Nassau County Courthouse,
Fernandina Beach, FL.

DEAR JUDGE DAVIS: I write to follow up on your September 12th letter to Senators Nelson and Rubio, copying me and Chairman Leahy, regarding concerns with your record Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, including me, raised last Congress.

As you alluded in your letter, during your hearing last Congress, Senator Lee asked you a number of questions regarding various remarks and speeches you made throughout your career. After carefully reviewing the answers you gave during the hearing, I concluded your responses lacked the breadth and clarity I had hoped you would provide when afforded the opportunity. For instance, you conceded that some comments were "inappropriate," but then stated "they were inappropriate for the reason that an impression could be gotten from them that somehow the court maintained a racial prejudice." That response troubled me because it did not appear to fully recognize the reason some find those comments concerning. Specifically, the comments appeared quite plainly to assign a racial motivation to those who opposed particular nominees on purely policy grounds.

Consequently, following your hearing I sent you a number of follow up questions for the record. Again, I was hopeful to receive some clarity regarding those comments. But after carefully reviewing your responses, I reluctantly reached the conclusion that you still did not fully appreciate why some viewed your comments as inappropriate. For instance, I asked about your comments regarding President Clinton's nomination of Dr. Henry Foster's nomination to be surgeon general. But rather than concede what appears to be apparent by the words you used, you answered instead that the comments were inappropriate because they "could be interpreted" in a particular way, and therefore that you lacked impartiality. In my view, your answers to several other questions lacked clarity in a similar fashion. For these reasons, among several others, reluctantly I opposed your nomination last Congress.

With this background, I received your letter of September 12th, 2013. In your letter you wrote, without qualification, "I believe that several of the statements I made in the past were inappropriate and improper." You went on to write, "I apologize for any inappropriate statements and deeply recognize the harm that they could cause if they gave the misimpression that I am anything other than impartial or that I maintain any bias or prejudice." I note that these two statements represent a step that you did not appear willing to take last Congress. In my view, this demonstrates both courage and humility. Thank you for that letter.

As your nomination is now again pending before the Committee, I write to seek one further clarification. As I noted, you wrote in your recent letter that you apologize for "any inappropriate statements," but you did not specify the statements to which you referred. I want to confirm that you are referring to your comments regarding Dr. Henry Foster, Dr. Joycelyn Elders, and Justice Thomas.

Thank you in advance for your prompt reply.

Sincerely,

CHARLES E. GRASSLEY,

Ranking Member,

U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

CIRCUIT COURT,

FOURTH JUDICIAL

CIRCUIT OF FLORIDA,

Fernandina Beach, FL, September 26, 2013.

Senator Charles E. Grassley,

Ranking Member, U.S. Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRASSLEY: Thank you for your letter of September 25, 2013, and the opportunity to further clarify my views.

I understand your concerns, and please know that my appreciation of the inappropriateness of statements I have made in speeches include those referenced in your letter regarding Dr. Foster, Dr. Elders and Justice Thomas.

Thank you for your continued consideration of my nomination.

Sincerely,

BRIAN J. DAVIS.

NOMINATION OF JOHN KOSKINEN

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I wish to speak on the nomination of John Koskinen to be the next Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service.

I want to say upfront that I support Mr. Koskinen's nomination as I believe he is a qualified candidate for this position and he deserves to be confirmed.

However, I do have to say that I am disappointed in the process by which his nomination has been moved through the Senate, both in the Finance Committee and here on the floor. There is simply no reason for the Senate to rush to confirm Mr. Koskinen, and there is ample reason for us to take our time.

It goes without saying that the IRS is one of the most powerful agencies in our government. It is both feared and loathed by people throughout the country. That being the case, it is absolutely essential that all the actions of the IRS and its leadership are above board.

That is the only way for the agency to maintain its credibility.

That is the only way an agency this powerful can maintain the trust of the American people.

The American people should be able to trust that the IRS will enforce our Nation's tax laws without bias or prejudice. If that trust is broken, it damages the credibility of our entire government.

Needless to say, over the last few years, the IRS hasn't done a good job of maintaining that trust and, as a result, it has eroded its own credibility.

I am talking, of course, about the IRS political targeting scandal currently under investigation in the Finance Committee.

If there is one thing that everyone should agree on, it is that the IRS should enforce the tax laws as they are written by Congress without consideration of political views. Sadly, it appears that, for a time, not everyone at the IRS shared that view.

When this scandal first came to light, there was condemnation on all sides and everyone—regardless of party affiliation—wanted to get to the bottom of it.

President Obama, for example, said "I have got no patience with it, I will not tolerate it, and we will make sure that we find out exactly what happened on this."

Majority Leader REID expressed similar views here on the floor, stating: "I have full confidence in the ability of Senator BAUCUS and the Finance Committee to get to the bottom of this matter and recommend appropriate action."

I hope that hasn't changed.

I hope that the effort to rush Mr. Koskinen's nomination through the Senate is not part of an effort to sweep the Finance Committee's investigation under a rug and hope it disappears.

As I said, there is no reason for us to move so quickly on this nomination.

By waiting until our investigation has concluded, we can ensure that the next commissioner—presumably Mr. Koskinen—will begin their time with the benefit of the findings of the investigation. This would put him in a better position to fix the problems we have uncovered and to move the agency forward. In addition, it would ensure that he has the confidence of Members of both parties, which is vital with an agency of this size and stature.

I am encouraged by Mr. Koskinen's commitment to continue the cooperation the Finance Committee has enjoyed so far in its investigation, as well as his commitment to working with Congress to fix the IRS's many problems.

I plan on holding him to his promise.

The confirmation of a new IRS Commissioner should not be a partisan issue.

My fear is that, by including Mr. Koskinen in the current partisan fight over executive branch nominees, the Senate Democratic leadership is injecting partisanship where none should exist. This further undermines the IRS as an agency, not to mention Mr. Koskinen's future leadership of the agency.

This is not a time that we should be undermining the IRS. In addition to restoring the agency's damaged credibility—which I believe should be the next commissioner's top priority—there are a number of other challenges facing this agency.

For example, there is the IRS's significant role in the implementation of ObamaCare. As we have seen thus far, this presents a number of difficulties, both in terms of operation and enforcement.

Both the IRS's inspector general and insurers throughout the country have questioned whether the agency is capable of administering the Affordable Care Act's premium subsidy program without massive amounts of fraud or improper payments.

On top of that, there are the proposed IRS and Treasury regulations addressing the political activities of tax-exempt organizations. Given the IRS's recent problems in dealing with these types of organizations, many of us have reason to be skeptical that the agency can promulgate such rules without further bias or prejudice.

On all these issues, Mr. Koskinen has committed to working with Congress, and with Members of both parties.

I hope that he lives up to this commitment.

It is essential that he does so, because, as I said, the IRS is an agency rife with problems, most of which are self-inflicted. These problems are not simply going to go away when a new Commissioner is confirmed, and they aren't going to be solved if the agency ignores the input and inquiries from Members of Congress.

Once again, I support Mr. Koskinen's confirmation. I just wish we had gone a different route with regard to his nomination in the Senate.

NOMINATION OF JANET YELLEN

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, today I wish to express my support for Vice Chairman Janet Yellen, nominee for Chairman of the Federal Reserve.

Dr. Yellen has dedicated her life to understanding the complex and evolving field of economics, and her background makes her an ideal candidate to replace Chairman Ben Bernanke and continue the Fed's efforts to boost economic growth, increase the pace of job creation, and ultimately reduce the crushing unemployment that has been a drag on our recovery.

Dr. Yellen's academic credentials and experience in economics are first rate.

She graduated summa cum laude from Brown University in 1967 and later earned a doctorate in economics from Yale University in 1971.

She began her teaching career as an assistant professor at Harvard University, where she taught from 1971 to 1976.

In 1977 and 1978 she began her public service as an economist at the Federal Reserve Board of Governors.

In 1980, Dr. Yellen headed west to my home State of California to become an assistant professor at the University of California, Berkeley. She rose to professor emeritus of business and economics and was twice awarded teacher of the year at Berkeley's distinguished Haas School of Business.

During her time at Berkeley and elsewhere, Dr. Yellen published numerous research works, including the well-regarded "Waiting for Work," a comprehensive study of unemployment she completed with her husband, the economist George Akerlof.

Dr. Yellen's research has been published in the Journal of Economics, Business Economics, and the Brookings Papers on Economic Policy, amongst others.

Her research has primarily focused on unemployment, monetary policy, and international trade—a perspective that will be vitally important as the Fed works to solve the complex issues facing the global economy.

In 1997, she left the Federal Reserve to chair the Council of Economic Advisers during the Clinton administration.

Before her appointment to Vice Chairman of the Fed she led the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco, keeping watch over financial conditions in the region as well as providing counsel on the direction of monetary policy.

In 2010, she was appointed by the president and confirmed by the Senate to be Vice Chairman of the Federal Reserve where she has ably served. She has been intimately involved with the Fed's interest rate policy and its continuation of the unprecedented program of quantitative easing.

I believe that this extensive experience working on monetary policy issues at the Federal Reserve will make for a seamless transition to Chairman and provide stability to financial markets.

Recently, a lot of attention is being paid to the issue of growing income inequality in our country.

Over the last few decades, middle-class incomes have stagnated while incomes for high earners have enjoyed a stratospheric rise. Increasingly, the owners of capital are reaping a greater and greater share of the profits, while hard working Americans struggle to keep up.

If this trend continues, it will make for a more volatile economy and put middle and lower income families in increasing financial strain.

Most importantly, if income inequality is really a product of inequality of opportunity, then the United States will no longer deliver on its most fundamental promise, one that serves as the foundation for our social contract.

To me, that outcome is unacceptable, and our leading economic thinkers should be working night and day to ensure that every hard-working American has the opportunity to be successful in this country.

The most direct way to address income inequality is to increase the rate of job creation in the United States. We have made significant progress in the recovery from the great recession, but the recovery has not been robust enough to translate into a robust labor market which increases wages for all Americans.

Dr. Yellen has demonstrated a consistent ability to balance the Fed's mission of increasing employment and maintaining stable inflation. Her academic work suggests that she is keenly aware of the devastating impact of persistently high unemployment, both for families and the economy writ large.

With her keen understanding of economics and a rigorous analytical process and a distinguished career in academia, Dr. Yellen is the right person to lead the Fed at this time.

And let me just say, a woman as Chairman of the Federal Reserve—a talented and extraordinarily well qualified woman—is a positive thing.

I enthusiastically support her nomination, and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New York.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 1882

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. 1882, a bill to extend the exclusion from income for employer-provided mass transit and parking benefits; that the bill be read three times and passed; and the motion to reconsider be considered made and laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate my colleague's commitment to this particular issue. However, this is just one of many tax provisions which will expire at the end of the year.

In the past, the senior Senator from New York supported the extension of numerous provisions, as have I, particularly the State and local sales tax deduction in his case. I can only wonder if he is signaling that the State and local sales tax provision, along with all the others which are expiring, are no longer a priority for him.

In any event, the Senate Finance Committee has jurisdiction over all the tax extenders, including the one being offered here today. As of yet, the committee has not been able to fully consider and report a tax extenders bill. As a senior member of the Senate Finance Committee himself, I would hope my colleague would want to work with other members of the committee to preserve its jurisdiction.

Since the House of Representatives has been out for 1 week, my colleague's request—even if agreed to in the Senate—would not result in extending the mass transit provision. Finance Committee Republicans stand ready to work with our Democratic colleagues when we return in a couple of weeks, and the House will be back then too. If we want to enact this extension into law, rather than just sending out talking points, we ought to engage in regular order when we get back.

On that basis, I ask unanimous consent to modify my colleague's unanimous consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that the request be modified to refer this bill to the Finance Committee so it can be properly considered through regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York accept the modification request?

Mr. SCHUMER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the original request?

Mr. HATCH. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is noted.

The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague. We are good friends and I know his heart is in the right place. I would just make a couple of quick points before I get into a little bit of the substance, and I will be brief.

The reason this extender has special weight and deserves being brought up today is the following: Most of the tax extenders—and I certainly support a large number of them—can be put into law retroactively with little harm done. Since most of them affect people's tax returns in 2015 if the law is changed, say, January or February of 2014, it doesn't affect this because the tax deduction would actually be filed before April 2015.

The one problem with the mass transit benefit is it is much harder to make retroactive. People try and we tried last year. We did it retroactively. But since the benefit goes each month to the commuter from his or her employer, retroactivity doesn't work quite as well.

That is why I felt it was important to try to get this passed now, so perhaps when the House returned immediately—there is good bipartisan support for this in the House support as well—they might enact it and we would not have to wait for the Finance Committee to go through a large number of other tax extenders hearings and whatever, because the longer it is retroactive, the harder it is.

I certainly appreciate my colleague's objection. I am going to fight very hard to try to get this done in January when we return. I would just make these following points about the benefit.

It is a win-win. It is a win for our mass transit commuters because then they get the same benefit—no more, no less—than those who drive to work and park. It was an anomaly in the law, pointed out by my late colleague, friend, and mentor, Senator Moynihan, that it was unfair to give people who drive their cars to work double the tax benefit of mass transit commuters. It is only fair to make them equal.

Right now, the law will raise the parking-driving benefit—those who drive to work—at the rate of inflation to $250. That is a good thing and I am all for that. But if the law is not renewed before December 31, the mass transit benefit, which I have worked hard to make equal to the park-and-drive benefit, will revert back to $130 a month, which is a lot less and unfair.

The second benefit is to people who drive. You say why would they benefit? They are getting theirs. The bottom line is, for every person who takes mass transit and doesn't take his or her car to work, that reduces congestion on the roads. So even if you never want to ride the train or the bus to work, you should be for this.

Finally, I would say the following: It benefits our environment. We all know that mass transit pollutes the air a lot less than people driving individual cars. In many places it is not possible to use mass transit, but in more and more parts of the country it is and we ought to be encouraging that. To have this benefit expire is bad, bad for people who take mass transit. Obviously there are a lot of them in my State—700,000—who get this benefit. It is bad for those who drive and bad for the clean air that we wish to breathe.

I will continue my quest because I think it is only fair and only right and it is good for all of America. As my colleague noted, it is a tax break. We generally can find more agreement on tax breaks than many other issues—fiscal and tax issues in this Congress. I will continue my quest to have this renewed as soon as possible, and I think it is not unfair to do it ahead of the other tax breaks because of the unique way that this benefit functions and how it is harder—not impossible but harder to enact retroactively.

Mr. President, I wish you, the entire staff who has done a great job here through the year, and all of my colleagues as well as those here in the gallery, a merry Christmas, a happy new year—not least of whom is my good friend and colleague from Utah who I know has a big and happy family. I wish them a merry Christmas and a happy new year as well.

I yield the floor, I guess with just about almost certainty for the last time in 2013.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate my colleague from New York. He is a great Senator. I understand his concern here, but we ought to do this in accordance with regular order, especially on the Finance Committee, to get to where we work on these matters and get them done in an exigent and good way, and I will certainly try to work with my colleague throughout this process.

Mr. President, I also would like to wish everybody who serves in this body a merry Christmas and a happy new year. This is a wonderful time of the year. We all feel pretty good today, having finally gotten through most of the work that we needed to get through.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank my colleague.

OBAMACARE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss the debacle that is the so-called Affordable Care Act. I don't think there is anyone in this Chamber, Republican or Democrat, who would dispute that thus far the implementation of this law has been a disaster, particularly with regard to the healthcare.gov Web site and the President's promise that "if you like your health care plan, you can keep it."

The administration has admitted that it bungled the rollout and has tried to cover up for what PolitiFact dubbed "the lie of the year," by passing the buck to States and insurers as to whether individuals would be able to keep their plans for the next year.

Let's be clear about this. ObamaCare's problems are deeply rooted in its DNA, and they are far larger, far bigger than just a Web site. Is the Web site causing the cost of health insurance premiums to go up dramatically? Is the Web site causing businesses to force more and more employees to work part-time? Is the Web site sending out cancellation notices to patients and consumers, telling them that their health care plans are no longer available? Of course not. Yet as the functionality of the Web site continues to improve, the administration is starting to talk as if every problem with the law has been fixed and that all the other issues are going to simply dissolve.

We know that is not the case. In reality the problems with ObamaCare are only beginning. I would like to take a few minutes to discuss some of the problems we are going to be seeing in the future as the President's health law continues to be implemented. I have to say that when it comes to ObamaCare, it is a little difficult to make predictions. That is because the administration has gone to great lengths to muddy the waters with delayed deadlines and unilateral policy changes. However, I think we can look through the opaque waters and identify at least six general areas where we can expect to see major problems in the coming months. These are six areas among many, but these are six I want to talk about today.

No. 1, we are going to continue to see problems with the implementation of ObamaCare. Like I said, there have undoubtedly been improvements to the Web site. They should be able to resolve that problem. It is a technical problem. It is a shame it was not resolved to begin with. It is a shame that enough time wasn't given to resolve it, but there still are issues that are far from resolved besides that.

Let's just look at the enrollment in the exchanges to see how things are going. As of November 30, roughly 365,000 individuals enrolled in health insurance coverage through the State and Federal exchanges. That is a small improvement from the numbers that we saw at the end of October but still far short of the benchmarks that the Department of Health and Human Services had set for enrollment in the exchanges. Originally, HHS touted a goal of enrolling 7 million people in the exchanges by March of 2014. According to a memo obtained by the Associated press, HHS projected that on the way to reaching that goal of 7 million enrollees, they would enroll roughly half a million people in the first month. Yet after 2 months they were still more than 100,000 people short of that one-month benchmark, which is not a high benchmark in my opinion.

The same memo projected that they would have 3.3 million enrollees by the end of 2013. Yet, if they are going to reach that goal, they will have to enroll nearly 10 times as many people as they have enrolled so far in just the next week and a half.

Sure, many of these enrollment problems are due to a poorly designed and poorly executed Web site, but even with the Web site's improvements, it would take a substantial miracle for the administration to meet its enrollment goals for the coming months.

There are other significant problems to be concerned about, most notably those associated with the premium subsidy program administered by the IRS.

Earlier this month the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration issued a report that found that the IRS has an inadequate system in place for preventing fraudulent premium subsidy payments from occurring and that people's personal information will likely be at risk. That is the Inspector General for Tax Administration. That is not Republicans. There are real questions as to whether the IRS can effectively verify the income of those applying for these subsidies. I have also raised the concern on a number of occasions.

Similar tax subsidy programs, including, for example, the Earned Income Tax Credit, EITC, that are paid out before they are verified, have improper payment rates as high as 25 percent. Think of that.

If we see the same improper payment rate on these ObamaCare subsidies as we do on the EITC, it will end up costing taxpayers hundreds of billions of dollars over the next 10 years. As I have said in the past, the ObamaCare premium subsidies with the lack of security and safeguards are a fraudster's dream. We have warned the administration, and I personally warned the administration.

The administration may claim that with the recent improvement to the healthcare.gov Web site all is now right with the world. However, as you can see, there are a number of administrative problems that, even with a functional Web site, have yet to be resolved.

No. 2, Americans will be left without coverage due to the problems with ObamaCare. As a result of the dismal rollout of ObamaCare, many Americans, particularly those who have tried to enroll in the exchanges, could very well end up being uninsured for a time. Maybe a significant time.

Last week an article appeared in the Washington Post that told the stories of people who were forced out of their existing health plans due to ObamaCare's coverage mandates but are unable to sign up for the new plans on the exchange due to the failings of the Web site. The deadline for signing up for coverage that starts on January 1, 2014, is December 23, 2013. Anyone who has been kicked off their plan who is unable to sign up before that date, which is just a few days away, will find themselves facing a gap in medical coverage.

For the chronically ill or for people with expensive medical conditions, this gap in coverage will be particularly acute. These people are, according to the Washington Post, "ObamaCare's biggest losers." Yet, ostensibly, these are the very people that this law was enacted for and supposed to help.

Another reason countless Americans may end up seeing gaps in coverage is simply because they will be unable to navigate the ever-changing landscape that is ObamaCare's dates and deadlines. Due to the failures of the rollout, the administration has delayed or shifted virtually every deadline associated with obtaining and paying for coverage. For example, like I said, the deadline for enrolling in insurance coverage that starts on January 1 is December 23, just a few days away. The deadline for actually getting the first premium payment to insurers is December 31. Both of these dates have been moved at least once already and could be moved again. They probably will be. On top of that, the administration has issued statements "encouraging" insurers to extend their own deadlines for payment and enrollment.

This is on top of the delays in the employer mandate, the SHOP exchanges, and the countless other provisions we have seen delayed or extended over the past year.

People are bound to be confused by all of these changes. It is nearly impossible for anyone, let alone those with serious medical conditions, to keep track of the ever-changing deadlines the administration keeps issuing. With no clarity as to when people should sign up and who they should pay and when, it is a virtual certainty that many consumers will find themselves uncovered for a period of time through no fault of their own.

The administration added to all of this uncertainty last night with the announcement it was going to allow people with canceled insurance plans to either buy catastrophic plans or avoid the requirement that they buy health insurance altogether. It has been less than a full day, and already this decision is causing confusion among insurers. It will almost certainly do the same for consumers.

It seems the Obama administration is making all of this up as they go along. Undoubtedly, many people will suffer the consequences of this ineptitude. The administration should be ashamed of the way this is bollixed up and messed up, and it is just going to get worse.

No. 3, there will continue to be spikes in premiums and other costs. We have already seen what is happening to the price of insurance in the individual market. Thanks to ObamaCare, millions of people have already lost their existing health insurance and have found that their options on the exchanges come with much higher premiums. This sticker shock has been widely reported. But that is not the end of the crisis problem.

Unfortunately, many people are also finding that their out-of-pocket costs will be dramatically increased thanks to higher copayments and prescription drug costs, included in plans on the exchanges. In many cases, it is difficult for patients to determine which medications are covered on the ObamaCare plans.

Unlike in Medicare Part D, the ObamaCare Web site does not have a plan finder that would enable consumers to search for plans based on coverage. These new costs are particularly high when compared with the insurance plans that were recently canceled.

But it is not just happening in the individual market. These price spikes are also hitting people with employer-provided insurance. According to a recent poll by the Associated Press, nearly half of Americans with job-based or other private insurance say their policies will be changing next year, mostly for the worse. So 69 percent say that the cost of their insurance will be going up; 59 percent say their annual deductibles or copayments are increasing. The Affordable Care Act did little to reign in the actual cost of health care.

When you add in the costs associated with the law's mandates and regulations, costs are going up, particularly for small businesses, our main job creators.

A recent survey of small business owners by the National Federation of Independent Business confirmed that this is already starting to happen. In the survey, 64 percent of small businesses reported that they paid more for employee health insurance premiums in 2013 than they did in 2012. Small business owners consistently cite the rising cost of health care as their top business concern.

This brings us to the next obvious prediction, No. 4. Millions of people will lose their existing employer-provided health insurance. Once again, we are all too familiar with President Obama's infamous promise, "If you like your health care plan, you can keep it," but little has been said about the threats ObamaCare's mandates pose to people who get their health insurance from their employers.

Put simply, the health law was designed specifically to invalidate existing health care plans—those deemed inadequate by the drafters of the law—in order to force people into more expensive plans with expanded coverage they don't necessarily want or need. This applies to both individual market plans and employer-provided plans alike. The administration's own estimates, published in the Federal Register, predicted that tens of millions of Americans with employer-sponsored—keep in mind, employer-sponsored—insurance will see their plans invalidated by the so-called Affordable Care Act's mandates and regulations.

According to a recent analysis by the American Enterprise Institute, as many as 50 to 100 million insurance policies in the employer-provided insurance market will see their plans canceled next fall when all business plans must be fully compliant with ObamaCare's insurance mandates. At that point businesses will have to face a difficult choice: Offer a more expensive health care plan to their employees or send employees into the exchanges. As we have already seen, that is not a great place to be.

No. 5, health insurers will either leave the market or face bankruptcy. One of the foundational assumptions made by the drafters of the Affordable Care Act was that the costs to insurers of providing vastly expanded coverage would be offset when more young and healthy patients are brought into the risk pools. Indeed, this is almost the entire basis for the individual mandate. The problem is that so far this doesn't seem to be happening, and I doubt it ever will. There is good reason to question whether it ever will. With the ever-increasing cost of insurance as a direct result of ObamaCare, there will likely be many who opt to stay out of the market altogether.

There is ample data right now to support this conclusion. For example, in a poll released earlier this month from the Harvard Institute of Politics, those in the millennial generation—the very people whom proponents of ObamaCare desperately need to add to the insurance pool—were shown to be highly skeptical of the law. In the poll, a majority of 18- to 29-year-olds disapproved of the Affordable Care Act and said it will increase their personal health care costs. Only 18 percent of respondents in that age group said they thought the law would improve their health care.

Clearly, the authors of ObamaCare thought that the individual mandate, along with the strong sense of civic duty, would coerce people into acting against their own interests and paying expanded costs for coverage they don't necessarily want or need; however, in the real world where people weigh costs and benefits before making a decision, millions of people are more likely to pay a fine instead of entering a skewed and unstable insurance market where costs are forever going up. A lot of these young people will not even pay the fine because there is no penalty for not doing so.

Without a greatly expanded risk pool of younger and healthier consumers, it is not going to be worth it for many insurers to stay in the market. Those insurers who do stay and try to stick it out will do so at greater risk to their financial future.

Insurers are not the only ones facing a dismal economic outlook as a result of ObamaCare, which brings me to my final prediction. Remember, I am just limiting it to six today. I will have more later.

No. 6, ObamaCare will continue to be a drag on business and our overall economy. It isn't just patients and consumers who are suffering under ObamaCare; employers are also facing difficulties as a direct result of ObamaCare. As I have discussed here on the floor at length in anticipation of the employer mandate, businesses all across the country have either reduced employment or have stopped hiring. Workers who had full-time jobs before the passage of ObamaCare are finding themselves moved into part-time work because under the law employers will be forced to provide coverage for full-time workers.

Even the unions, which were among the largest and biggest supporters of the health law when it was being debated in Congress, have come out and said the law is destroying the 40-hour workweek for American workers.

Last week the National Association of Manufacturers released its quarterly survey of its members which showed overwhelmingly that the President's health care law is having a negative impact on the manufacturing sector. According to that survey, more than 20 percent of manufacturers have cut or decelerated their business investment as a result of ObamaCare. Nearly one-quarter of them have either reduced employment or ceased hiring. Roughly one-third of them say they have reduced their business outlook for 2014 as a result of the so-called Affordable Care Act. And more than 77 percent—nearly 8 in 10—of manufacturers cited rising health insurance costs as a primary business challenge.

In other words, at a time when our economy is growing at a sluggish pace and job growth remains lackluster, the President and Democrats in Congress continue to support a health care law that is making America a much more difficult place to do business and to find and keep a job. It is only going to get worse as this wears on. These are just some of the problems we are going to see in the coming months as a direct result of ObamaCare, and they are not going to go away so long as the Affordable Care Act remains in place.

As I see it, with 2013 coming to a close, the President and his allies here in Congress are at a crossroads. As I see it, they have two choices: They can continue to double down on the same failed policy that is increasing the cost of health insurance in this country and causing millions of people to lose their existing coverage and will continue to wreak havoc well into the future or they can, for once, try to work with Republicans on replacing this failure with something that has a real chance of success. I hope that eventually my colleagues will choose the latter, but needless to say I don't think I can keep my hopes up.

Last but not least, I hope this is not leading to a throwing of the hands in the air, admitting this doesn't work, and then saying we have to go to socialized medicine, or what many call a single-payer system. If we do that, I have to tell you, we will never get out from under this mess.

We had a system that was working pretty well. There were up to 30 million people who did not have coverage. Why didn't we just concentrate governmentally on helping the 30 million people rather than doing this colossally bad bill that we are all going to rue the day we did? I am so concerned about it.

There are ways we can work together. I really believe we have to find some folks on the other side of the aisle who really understand this and who really understand that they are getting killed by this bill. Hopefully, we can find some folks who will sit down and work with people like myself. I have been instrumental in an awful lot of health care legislation over the last 37 years. Hopefully, we can work together in order to get this terrible problem resolved. I am concerned about it.

Health care should never have been a partisan issue, and in this case it is a totally partisan issue. Every Democrat in the House and Senate voted for it. Not a single Republican in the House or Senate voted for it. We all voted against it, knowing in advance that it would be a disaster. Frankly, I would like to get rid of the disaster, and I hope we can find some colleagues on the other side who will be willing to work to do that.

I hope the President will wake up. I think he thinks he is going to double down and fight for this, when, in fact, it is killing his reputation and the Democratic Party's reputation as well.

We clearly can't keep going the way we are.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. I ask unanimous consent to be able to engage the Senator from New Hampshire in a colloquy for about 20 minutes. I would appreciate it if the Presiding Officer would let us know when the 20 minutes has expired. I would like to discuss the military retiree position and the budget with Senator AYOTTE when she gets here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MILITARY RETIREMENT

Mr. GRAHAM. The Presiding Officer is from Virginia, and I know he understands military men and women very well. It is a very patriotic State when it comes to their military footprint. I am confident that he and I—and others—will be able to fix the problem that occurred in the budget agreement.

Let me say about the agreement itself that I do appreciate the fact that we were able to find a bipartisan way forward to relieve sequestration from the military and nonmilitary for a couple of years. That is just a drop in the bucket as far as what we have to do to repair the military. GDP spending on the military is moving toward an all-time low over a 10-year period with sequestration. The historical average has been well over 4 percent, and we are going to hit below 3 percent if we continue sequestration. That is an issue for another day.

The budget agreement called for relieving sequestration in the pay-fors. Quite frankly, they were not big. They did not change the course of the country. They are not what the Senator from Virginia and I hoped for. We would have liked to have done entitlement reform. I would like to do Tax Code simplification. I am willing to eliminate deductions in the Tax Code and take some of the money to pay down the debt, even though some folks on my side say we have to put it all in tax reductions. And I think the Senator from Virginia would be willing to engage in commonsense entitlement reform to keep us from becoming Greece.

This was the best deal we could get. It didn't do the big deal, but it did provide some budget relief for a 2-year period, and it was about $60-something billion; I can't remember the number.

The bottom line is that one of the ways you paid for relieving pressure on the defense budget and nondefense spending was there was a provision that will affect military retirees, which nobody will own, that got into the budget agreement.

I am on the Budget Committee. I was not consulted about the agreement; I read about it in the paper. There is a fine line between having a bunch of people involved who kind of keep things from never developing to produce a product and having a handful of people doing something in a small room, not vetted.

So the bottom line is that $6.3 billion of the pay-fors came from adjusting military retirement cost-of-living allowances for those who have served our military for 20 years and are therefore eligible for retirement. What they did was they took the COLA and reduced it by 1 percent for every military retiree until they reach the age of 62.

The President, to his credit, has called for an adjusting CPI, the way COLAs are calculated, for everybody—for civilians, military, Social Security—to make it more consistent with sustainable inflationary increases. This didn't adjust the COLA, it left the formula as it is; it just reduced the military retiree's COLA by 1 percent until the military retiree reaches age 62, and that is the only group in the country that had that happen. So $6.3 billion is taken away from men and women who have served for 20 years, and no one else had the pleasure of that experience.

Civilian employees, new hires, had to contribute additional funds to the Federal retirement system to help pay for the deal, but it only affected new retirees; the people who are in the system were grandfathered. The only group that Congress found fit to single out for the retroactive application was the retiree community.

All I can say is that military pay—retirement, pension pay, health care benefits are going to be subject to being reviewed and they will be subject to reform, because a larger portion of our budget in DOD is personnel costs. The Congress, in its wisdom, set up a commission to look at this issue. They are supposed to report back in 2014—now maybe it is as late as 2015—about how to reform military pay and benefits as part of an overall restructuring of the Pentagon.

One thing Congress put into the commission's charter was that they had to grandfather people who are currently in the system. In the budget agreement we singled out military retirees for a 1-percent reduction of their COLA and nobody was grandfathered—$6.3 billion coming out of the pockets of those who have served. For an E-7 who is going to retire at 40 and has his or her COLA reduced to age 62, it is between $71,984 or $80,000, depending on who you talk to, in loss and benefits. And the E-7 receives in retirement pay after 20 years of faithful service about $25,000 a year—not exactly becoming independently wealthy.

We have one of the leading voices on this issue, Senator AYOTTE from New Hampshire, who took up this challenge and came up with some solutions early on and has been a great voice about how unfair this is. So I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Ms. AYOTTE. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from South Carolina.

I picked up an editorial this morning from the Washington Post that calls the cuts to the cost-of-living adjustments to military retirees minuscule and demeans this criticism. It calls the cuts teensy-weensy.

I don't understand why anyone would want to support a measure that singles out—in other words, under this budget agreement, the group that got the cuts to their current benefits are those who have sacrificed the most for our country. To call this minuscule or teensy-weensy—I don't think it is so minuscule, as the Senator from South Carolina said, to an E-7 who makes about $25,000 a year in retirement and will lose close to $72,000 from the time he or she retires at 40 until they are 62. That is about 3 years of their retirement. That is not minuscule in a working family.

This is not a minor situation. It is not minuscule to our veterans, those wounded warriors who have given the most, and who have, unfortunately, suffered so much.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Ms. AYOTTE. I yield.

Mr. GRAHAM. This applies to disabled retirees as well, right?

Ms. AYOTTE. It does. We have all visited Walter Reed and we have all met our wounded warriors who are heroes. They have sacrificed more than we could ever ask anyone to sacrifice for our Nation. Some of them don't have arms, legs. They receive a medical retirement because of their service and their disability as a result of the service they have rendered so gravely for our country, and they get cut under this too. I don't think the cut to them is teensy-weensy or minuscule. Only in Washington would this be minimized in terms of how people are viewed as minuscule or teensy-weensy in light of the service they have given to our country. I thought this description of it was wrong and offensive and demoralizing in terms of the message it sends to our men and women in uniform.

I think the encouraging part of where we are right now is that so many in this body have come forward and said we need to fix this and recognize this does have an unfair impact on our military retirees and, of course, those who have received a medical retirement.

Whether I disagreed with my colleagues voting for the agreement, regardless of where my colleagues stand on the agreement, I think it is time for us to come together on a bipartisan basis and do the right thing and fix this on behalf of our men and women in uniform, especially our wounded warriors.

Obviously, this body realizes this is not minuscule and this is not teensy-weensy in terms of the impact on our heroes and those who have sacrificed so much for our country. I am very encouraged to see so many of my colleagues over the last couple of days coming forward with different ideas about how we can fix this and do the right thing on behalf of our men and women in uniform.

I have introduced a piece of legislation that would come up with billions of dollars for a pay-for to fix this. I know others have different ideas. But I know this: We can put politics aside. We can fix this for our men and women in uniform.

After we go home for the holidays, I think when we come back in January, this should be a No. 1 priority in this body, which is to do the right thing for our military retirees, for those who are our wounded warriors. The number of people I have seen speak out on this issue in the last few days gives me encouragement that we will be able to do this and do it quickly on their behalf, to right this wrong. Some of them are 19 years in. Maybe they have done multiple tours in Afghanistan and are thinking of retiring. We need to let them know we understand their sacrifice, we should not have singled them out, we will get this right, and that we understand that of all the people who should not have been singled out in this agreement are those who take the bullets for us and whose families have had to go through multiple deployments.

I think about the fact that when someone has done a 20-year military career and one has had multiple deployments, the spouse can't have the same kind of career as if they were able to live in one place. They sacrifice so much because they are traveling around the world and the retirement they receive obviously recognizes that.

So as we leave for the holidays, I hope when we get back, we get this right, we take this up, we honor the service of our men and women in uniform and do what is right.

Mr. GRAHAM. Senator AYOTTE mentioned this Washington Post editorial. The Washington Post is, in my view, a very good newspaper. I like the editorial board. They have been right on Syria and a lot of other issues. Sometimes we disagree, that is for sure. But this one editorial has gotten my attention to the point that I have to respond and, quite frankly, ask my friends at the Washington Post to reevaluate their position and think a little bit about what they are saying in their editorial when it comes to military retirees.

As she said, the editorial says this is a "teensy-weensy" small cut. I said that we were screwing the military retirement community and maybe a better way of saying it was we are disrespecting the military retiree community, because when I said we were screwing the military retirees, it was sort of like the financial package. They are having to give up retirement benefits—the COLA reductions—that not one other person in the entire country has to go through. And it is not teensy-weensy. When it is 1 percent calculated from 40 to 62, it is $71,000 to $80,000; if you are an officer, $100,000. Again, you get about $25,000 in retirement when you are an E-7; some in the thirties if you are an O-5. But to get that you have to serve your country for 20 years, uprooting your family—probably the average number of moves has to be five or six. If you have been on Active Duty since 9/11, God knows how many times you have been to Iraq and Afghanistan and other places.

Here is the deal: Your children are not subject to being drafted. Why? Because we abolished the draft, and we put in place an all-volunteer force, and part of the deal was that we would take care of the military member and their family in an appropriate way if they would bear that burden for the rest of us.

Are these people really living large off the rest of us? Should we be offended at this “great deal” we are giving these people who retire at 40 or 45 or 38? You know, the “My God, aren’t they just sort of taking the rest of us for a ride” attitude really offends the hell out of me.

To get that $25,000 in retirement for the rest of your life—and I hope you live to be 80, or you just name the number—you had to work for it, you had to risk your life for it, you had to ask of your children something that most people do not have to ask; that is, move and leave your friends every couple years. You had to do things for the rest of us that, apparently, we do not appreciate anymore at the Washington Post.

I do not know what the editorial board’s makeup is. They are all patriotic, I am sure good people, and if they have veterans down there, boy, you let your fellow veteran down by approaching this issue in such a harsh, insensitive way. Their response was: No, the military retiree is not getting screwed. This is just a small step to something larger.

What they are trying to do—which offends me—is, one, they do not know what they are talking about, which is unusual for the Washington Post. Do not confuse my disgust with the singling out of military retirees in a retroactive fashion to pay for a budget deal that does not do a whole lot to change the course of the country with my desire and willingness to reform military pay and pension benefits in the future through a logical process.

Now, that offends me. That is pretty clever.

So can you be for reform and be disgusted at the same time? Yes. And here is the good news. Very few U.S. Senators are taking the Washington Post tactic that these people deserve more cuts—not less—singled out. I think the Washington Post is on an island of its own, at least I hope so.

People who voted yes—Senator MCCAIN, God knows he has earned his retirement; Senator CHAMBLISS; Senator ISAKSON—have come up with a way to fix this, and all three of them will say: I will embrace military pay and pension benefit reform in the future. I am not just going to single out the military retiree and reduce their COLA when no one else gets that reduction retroactively, violating their own commission charter.

Senator SHAHEEN on the other side wants to fix it. Senator MURRAY wants to fix it. I am really pleased that a lot of people have said: Now that I understand how this works, we need to fix it.

I have not even mentioned the fact that it does apply to disabled retirees. If you had your legs blown off in Afghanistan, it might be pretty hard to get another job. Your COLA is reduced too.

What do you say to those people? Thank you? Itsy-bitsy, teensy-weensy? Really? But they did not mention in the editorial that it applies to the disabled retiree. Mr. President, $600 million of the $6 billion comes from that community.

Here is my point: It is not so much that we were insensitive. It just shows me how far we have fallen as a nation and how comfortable we are for other people to do the fighting and we see these folks almost as the hired help, even though we profusely praise them, and we should. We welcome them home when they come back. We cheer when they go away. We trip over ourselves as politicians to show our love and affection. The average person at the airport says: Thank you for your service. We are well-meaning people. But to believe that somehow they are being fairly treated in this budget deal and really we are just not doing enough from the Washington Post’s perspective, I think loses sight of what they have done for the rest of us.

Let’s say we never reformed a penny of military retirement in the future and we left it as it is. About $1.734 million is the package over the lifetime from the 20-year retirement point to death, which the average could be 40 years. We need to look at that. But let’s say we did not change a penny. Over a 40-year period, at $25,000 a year, do you begrudge these people this package? After 20 years of service, they are now in their forties, their late thirties—the average is probably in the mid forties—they have to start over again. Go do that. Not so easy. And somehow we are suggesting that we are being too generous?

Would you send your kid? If I gave you $1.74 million over the next 40 years, is that worth it for you to have your kid sent over to Afghanistan or Iraq, if they did not want to go? That is what this is about.

So to my friends at the Washington Post, I do not know what happened here. I do not know how you could justify and defend this provision in the budget agreement that nobody wants to claim credit for. Again, I will reform military pay and pension benefits through the commission process prospectively, but I will not sit on the sidelines and watch these people, yes, get screwed financially but, more than that, be disrespected.

To my House and Senate colleagues, Republican and Democrats, we created this problem together. We will have to fix it together. And to the military retiree community, the disabled retiree, I am confident that Republicans and Democrats will right this wrong.

Having said that, there will come a day when we will sit down and look long and hard about the sustainable nature of personnel costs—TRICARE reform—pay and pension reform—but we are going to do it understanding you have a special place in our heart, but when it comes to balancing the budget and writing the Department of Defense long-term financial obligations, that we will look at this in a professional manner, and we will do it in the way least intrusive, and we will give people notice. We will not change the deal.

Can you imagine what it is like to have fought since 9/11; you are getting ready to retire in 2016, after 20 years of faithful service—or maybe longer—you are from your last deployment in Afghanistan; you have been to Iraq a couple times, Afghanistan a couple times; you had a couple buddies die; you have missed countless birthdays and Christmases, and every time a strange car pulls up into the driveway, your spouse loses their breath, and you read that this is what the Congress is doing to you—changing the deal? You did your part of the deal, but all of a sudden we decide to change the deal because we have to find some money around this place to pay for a budget deal that does not do a whole lot for the long-term indebtedness of the country. And when we look to find money, we saw you as a source of money—not as the patriot, not as the front-line defender of freedom, not as the volunteer who took the burden off our backs and gave our families a pass. Shame on us all.

But the way you fix it is you fix it. To my friends at the Washington Post, Bowles-Simpson never said as part of their efforts to balance the budget—and I embrace their process—that we would eliminate military retiree COLAs as a recommendation. They set a target goal of saving $70 billion over 10 years from a Federal workforce entitlement task force to be set up to look at civilians and the military who work for the Federal Government, and they created the task force with a target goal of achieving $70 billion as a contribution toward reforming entitlements on that side of the ledger.

They gave examples of what the task force might look at: Use the highest 5 years of earnings to calculate civil service pension benefits for new retirees, rather than the highest 3 years. That could save $5 billion. Defer cost-of-living adjustments, as we are talking about here. That could save $5 billion. Adjust the ratio of employer-employee contributions to Federal employee pension plans to equalize contributions, $4 billion. These are examples of things to look at—not Bowles-Simpson recommendations. The recommendation of Bowles-Simpson was to find $70 billion from military and civilian retirement programs over 10 years through a task force.

What did the Congress do? We set up a commission—rather than a task force—to do exactly what Bowles-Simpson said to do. And to our wisdom, we told the commission, when it comes to the military, grandfather those who are currently in the system. That made sense to me. But under the budget agreement, we violated our own instructions to the commission by getting $6.3 billion from the military retirement community retroactively, from everybody in the system up to age 62, and only them. The civilian workforce had to make a contribution only for new hires.

If that is OK with the Washington Post, then I would suggest you have lost your way down there. I hope I never get so smart that taking $72,000, $80,000, $100,000—whatever the number is; the bottom line is, the minimum was $72,000 out of the E-7 cost-of-living adjustment; 3 years of their retirement—I hope I never get so smart about the budget that I find that to be itsy-bitsy, teensy-weensy. I hope I never get so callous that I could sit on the sidelines and allow the military retirement community to be singled out, unlike anybody else in the Nation, to find $6.3 billion when we are looking for money.

The bottom line is we will find the $6.3 billion. We are going to find it in a more acceptable way. And there will come a day when we reform benefits, but we are going to do it consistent with the charter that the Congress has created.

To our military community, you need to fight. You need to show up during the holiday break, and you need to remind all of us—just not Members of Congress—you need to toot your horn a little bit because it is so darn hard for you to do. You should humbly ask the U.S. House and Senate to reconsider this. You should humbly ask that the pay you received has been earned, and to change the deal in midstream is wrong. And you should remind us that: I have lived up to my end of the bargain. I am only asking that you live up to your end of the bargain. We need your voice.

So to the Senator from Virginia, who is presiding over the Senate, I know you will be part of the solution. There is a sweeping movement here in the Senate to try to find a way to right what I think is an injustice. Reform will come with it. But it sure as hell is not going to come this way.

I yield the floor. Merry Christmas.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST— EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, first I wish to thank my colleagues from New Hampshire and South Carolina.

There is at least an opportunity or a tradition at the end of a calendar year that we take the nominations pending in the Senate, both in committee and on the calendar, and literally return them to the White House. That means that in the beginning of the next year, we start over. It may mean a hearing, it may mean postponement, but we lose all we have achieved up to this point. We absolutely have to start over. I would argue at this point that we seriously consider changing that tradition, and I will make a unanimous consent request to change it.

There are some 238 total nominees who are at issue here. Eighty-three are on the Executive Calendar and 155 are pending in committee—nominations sent by the White House to Capitol Hill which have either been lost—not lost in committee but held in committee—or sent to the calendar. Of the group I have just mentioned, of the 238, 47 are judicial nominations, 36 are Ambassadors—and I have read through the list of countries here and they range from some of the smaller ones to larger countries as well—and 86 are nominees to Cabinet-level agencies. So it is a wide spectrum of appointments that have been sent for Senate consideration to Capitol Hill.

We are embroiled in an internal debate about the rules of the Senate concerning the filibuster and nominations. It is one that has not been resolved to the satisfaction of either side of the aisle, but we have labored through it over the last several weeks and will when we return.

I am going to make a unanimous consent request that those nominations—all of them; the military nominations as well as others—be held here on the calendar and in committee and not be returned to the White House, thereby requiring we repeat everything we have done in this previous year. We don't get high marks at the end of this year for our legislative performance, and to throw aside all of the effort that has been put into these nominees and require the White House to start over is literally a waste of time and unfortunate for these nominees, many of whom have been waiting for a long period of time for consideration and a vote by the Senate.

This is a chance, with this unanimous consent request, to get the next year off to a good start, where we can take what has been done with nominees, use it, take those nominations that are on the calendar, move forward; they will still be subject to an up-or-down vote. The Senate has to work its will, and that will not be compromised at all by the unanimous consent request I am making, but I am hoping we can get it through so that when we return on January 6, we will have an opportunity to move with a little more dispatch and a little more productivity in the Senate.

As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that all nominations received by the Senate during the 113th Congress, first session, remain in status quo, notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXXI, paragraph 6, of the Standing Rules of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAHAM. Yes. Reserving the right to object, to my good friend from Illinois, all I can say is that the normal way the Senate has operated for a couple of hundred years has been destroyed this year, and asking that normalcy come about now is beyond the pale, but we are where we are. So I object.

However, I urge the Senate to act to confirm the many military nominations pending for the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Coast Guard. So I object, with that understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I understand we are at a point of great emotions and feelings, stress in the Senate over the change in the rules about the use of the filibuster in the Senate. Unfortunately, it appears that we are going to stay in that state for at least a short period of time, and I am not holding my colleague from South Carolina accountable for that. I believe what he has done is reflect the feelings on that side of the aisle, not just his personal feelings. However, I believe he has made a valuable suggestion.

NATIVE AMERICAN MEMORIAL AMENDMENTS ACT

Mr. SCHATZ. Mr. President, last night the Senate passed the Native American Memorial Amendments Act of 2013. The bill now heads to the President for his signature. I introduced the Native American Memorial Amendments Act in May. I have worked with Representative MULLIN since he introduced an identical bill in the House in June.

This bill is needed to facilitate construction of a long-awaited Native American Veterans' Memorial on the National Mall. This memorial has languished for almost 20 years since the passage of the original Native American Veterans' Memorial Establishment Act. This legislation builds off of the great work of Senator McCAIN, who introduced the initial bill to authorize the Native American Veterans' Memorial, and Senator Inouye, who as the Indian Affairs Committee chairman worked to enact the law in 1994.

My bill also continues Senator Akaka's great legislative effort to fulfill the promise of this memorial. Native Americans, including Native Hawaiians, Alaska Natives, and American Indians, serve and have always served at a higher rate in the Armed Forces than any other group of Americans per capita.

In every conflict since the Revolutionary War, Native Americans have answered the call to serve and defend our country. I introduced my bill so our Nation can recognize Native Americans' service and patriotism with a fitting memorial. A memorial to Native veterans will make sure future generations learn about the sacrifices Native Americans have made in service to our Nation.

It will commemorate their exceptional commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy. Last month, Congress awarded its highest honor, the Congressional Gold Medal, to the American Indians we know as code talkers. These brave men played a critical, and for too long unacknowledged, role in both World Wars. The celebration of our legendary code talkers in Emancipation Hall at the U.S. Capitol was a historic and proud moment.

But it is regrettable that most of the 216 honored did not live to see their heroic contributions acknowledged. Congress was decades late in recognizing the Native American code talker's work when we needed them most. We cannot make that mistake again. I believe now is the perfect time to move forward on a lasting tribute to all Native veterans, including the extraordinary contribution of Native Hawaiians.

My home State of Hawaii is second to none when it comes to patriotism, public service, and personal sacrifice. The heroic deeds of Anthony T. Kaho'ohanohano from Wailuku, Maui, prove just how true this is. He joined the Army to fight in combat in the Korean war.

He was assigned to Company H, 17th Infantry Regiment, 7th Infantry Division. Private First Class Kaho'ohanohano displayed extraordinary heroism near Chopra-Ri, Korea, on September 1, 1951. Due to the enemy's overwhelming numbers, troops were forced to execute a limited withdrawal. As the men fell back, Kaho'ohanohano ordered his squad to take up more defensible positions. He provided cover fire for them.

Although painfully wounded in the shoulder during the initial enemy assault, he gathered a supply of grenades and ammunition and returned to his original position to face the enemy alone. Kaho'ohanohano delivered deadly, accurate fire onto the advancing enemy. After going through all of his ammunition, he engaged the enemy in hand-to-hand combat until he paid the ultimate price fighting to protect his fellow soldiers.

President Obama awarded U.S. Army Private First Class Kaho'ohanohano the Presidential Medal of Honor, our Nation's highest military honor, posthumously. Private First Class Kaho'ohanohano, the thousands of Native Hawaiians, and Native Americans who have served our country with such honor deserve a memorial on the National Mall.

My Native American Memorial Amendments Act that passed last night will allow for a privately funded memorial to be located on grounds under the jurisdiction of the National Museum of the American Indian. The museum will have the much needed flexibility to raise funds and take on a more active role in planning and construction.

The Native American Memorial Amendments Act of 2013 was endorsed by the National Congress of the American Indians, Alaska Federation of Natives, the Council for Native Hawaiian Advancement, the largest three Native American membership organizations in the country. The National Museum of the American Indian and the National Park Service are in agreement as well.

I wish to thank the strong support of the bipartisan cosponsors of this bill: Senators BARRASSO, BEGICH, HEITKAMP, INHOFE, MURKOWSKI, TESTER, THUNE, and WYDEN. I also wish to thank especially chairwoman MARIA CANTWELL for her work to ensure the passage of this bill. It is long past time for our Nation to honor the uncommon contributions of Native Hawaiians, Native Alaskans and American Indians and other Native veterans. These brave men and women have served during war and peace to preserve our freedoms in remarkable high numbers. The valor of our Native American veterans, their dedication to duty and remarkable record of military service must forever be remembered. This memorial will do just that.

I yield the floor.

BIPARTISAN BUDGET RESOLUTION

PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I come to the floor today with my friend

Chairman WYDEN to express support for extending natural resource programs that are critical to communities across the country. This week the Senate passed a bipartisan budget resolution. In January we will return to consider legislation to fund the government for the rest of the fiscal year.

This past October, Congress was able to extend critical payments to forested counties under the Secure Rural Schools, SRS, program for 1-year in a bipartisan fashion. Irrespective of the appropriations bill that we may take up in January, we now need to do the same for counties eligible for payments under the Payment in Lieu of Taxes Program, or PILT. PILT is a permanently authorized program created in 1976 that since 2008 has received direct spending. It is an essential source of funding for local governments that cannot collect taxes from Federal land within their borders.

A long-term solution to provide stable direct funding for PILT and other natural resource programs that buttress rural economies, like SRS and the Land and Water Conservation Fund, is our common goal. In the meantime, we remain committed to extending direct spending on PILT and look forward to finding an opportunity to do so in the first half of 2014. Does the distinguished senator from Oregon wish to express himself on these points?

Mr. WYDEN. Madam President, I wish to associate myself with the comment of my friend from Montana and affirm that I too share the commitments he described. These payments extend a vital lifeline to counties across America, many of which are perched on the edge of financial disaster. Securing that funding has been a top priority for me this Congress. I am pleased that Congress found a way to continue its commitment to the Secure Rural Schools Program thanks to the helium bill that I worked on with colleagues in the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. There is still work to do for the 1,850 PILT-eligible counties, and I look forward to working with the majority leader and Chairman BAUCUS—who are both longtime champions of PILT—and other supportive colleagues to find a short-term extension and also a long-term solution for these communities.

FARM BILL CONFERENCE

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, while the days are limited before the end of 2013, the Farm Bill Conference Committee presses on, working together in a bipartisan fashion to resolve differences and to take the steps necessary to enact a comprehensive and balanced farm bill. Under the leadership of Chairwoman STABENOW and Chairman LUCAS, it now appears we are on target to complete our work on this bill early in the New Year.

Nonetheless, it has now been more than 440 days since the farm bill first expired. Farms are businesses, and farmers in Vermont and across the country are desperate to have a new farm bill enacted to give them the much-needed certainty for their planting and other farm decisions. Since the 2008 farm bill expired last year, we have seen parts of the country ravaged by blizzards that wiped out cattle herds while commodity prices slump. More than 20 programs, including the Organic Certification Cost Share Program, the Beginning Farmer and Rancher Development Grant Program, livestock disaster, renewable energy programs, and assistance for rural small business owners have been stranded without updated charters, and the USDA has had to press the pause button since these programs are stuck with no authorized funding. Those who participate in these programs are left hanging. That is as unwise as it is unfair.

Last week the House of Representatives quickly took up and passed a short-term extension of the farm bill with very little debate and has asked the Senate to do the same. I have heard a lot of concern here in the Senate that this short, 1-month extension could allow direct payment subsidies to continue for another full year. We have already agreed on a bipartisan and bicameral basis to get rid of these unnecessary and expensive direct payment subsidies to agribusiness, so we should not fall into this trap of extending them for a full year. That would be unacceptable, and, according to Secretary Vilsack, unnecessary.

Secretary Vilsack has indicated that if Congress completes the farm bill in early January, which can be done based on progress we have already made, we will not see the negative effects of the expiration of the dairy title, and implementation of the law should go smoothly. This is a reassuring, positive signal from the Secretary that consumers and our dairy farmers will not see the spikes in the cost of milk that we had all feared last New Year's Eve.

Of course, if the House of Representatives really wanted to get a farm bill done sooner, they would have kept the House in session this week instead of recessing for the year. Instead, they pushed forward a counterproductive short-term extension to make it seem that they are doing something for farmers. This comes after the House leadership spent much of the past 2 years dragging their feet on farm policy and reforms, while the Senate has now passed two overwhelmingly bipartisan and reform-oriented farm bills.

While we had first hoped to complete this work in 2012, the farm bill was pushed back to 2013, and it will soon become the 2014 farm bill. Over the last 2 years, the need for this comprehensive legislation has only grown. We have all heard stories from our home States about the real impacts caused by the failure of Congress to pass a new farm bill and the continued uncertainty for farmers and those who rely on USDA's nutrition programs. I regret that far too many hungry and food insecure families across America have to wonder whether this most basic assistance will still be in place to offer support in the new year. I have always been a strong proponent of nutrition assistance programs and the doors they open and will continue to oppose drastic and draconian cuts and damaging changes to these programs.

I look forward to returning in January and sitting down with the Conference Committee to work through the final details of this bill. We cannot delay any longer, and I am pleased that Chairwoman STABENOW and Chairman LUCAS have come together in a bipartisan way to move the farm bill forward. As a past chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, and a seven-time farm bill conferee, I know the challenges they have faced. I look forward to helping with the final steps in conferencing this legislation—a bill that touches every American. Its passage will strengthen the Nation and grow our economy.

The Farm Bill has long stood as a model of bipartisan consensus. I look forward to the Senate and House reaching a final bipartisan agreement that will move the bill forward to the President's desk.

JUDICIAL NOMINATIONS IN 2013

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, Republicans are once again—for the fifth year in a row—rejecting the long-standing Senate practice of scheduling confirmation votes on consensus nominees before the end of the session. Rather than working in a bipartisan fashion to confirm consensus nominees to fill judgeships as we wind down for the year, Senate Republicans have deliberately refused to agree to vote on consensus nominees who could and should be confirmed without delay. The result is that we will spend a significant portion of the next year on the Senate floor doing work that should have been completed this year. And now the Republican abuse of Senate rules has further escalated—Republicans have, for the first time ever, refused to allow any currently pending judicial nominees to be held over so that they could be ready for immediate action next year. For purely political reasons, Senate Republicans are forcing us to duplicate work next year that we have already completed in 2013. It is a waste of taxpayer dollars and valuable resources that could be spent addressing the difficult issues facing our Nation.

As it stands, nine judicial nominations pending on the Senate Executive Calendar—all reported by the Judiciary Committee unanimously or with significant bipartisan support—are being returned to the President. Another 15 judicial nominees who could have been reported to the full Senate and confirmed by the end of this year had Senate Republicans not blocked the Judiciary Committee's ability to meet to report these nominees to the full Senate are being returned to the President. Another 31 judicial nominees pending in the Senate Judiciary Committee will also be returned to the President. Each of these nominations represents a significant amount of work by the nominees themselves, the White House, the Department of Justice, and Senate staff on both sides of the aisle. The only judicial nomination not being returned to the President is Robert Wilkins' nomination to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit because the procedural posture of his nomination enables the Senate to hold his nomination over until next year. I am pleased that Judge Wilkins' nomination will not be returned, which allows for quick action next year, but there is no good reason to return any of the other 55 judicial nominations pending in the Senate.

Senate Republicans' persistent obstruction over the last 5 years has led to record-high vacancies in Federal courts throughout the country. At the end of 2009, Senate Republicans left 10 nominations on the Executive Calendar without a vote. Two of those nominations were returned to the President, and it subsequently took 9 months for the Senate to take action on the other eight. This resulted in the lowest 1-year confirmation total in at least 35 years. At the end of 2010 and again in 2011, Senate Republicans left 19 nominations on the Senate Executive Calendar. It then took nearly half the following years for the Senate to confirm these nominees. Last year they blocked 11 judicial nominees from votes and refused to expedite consideration of others who had already had hearings. And this year, they have escalated their obstruction and delay of judicial nominations by indiscriminately requiring that nominees be sent back to the President at the end of this first session of the 113th Congress, the effect of which is to needlessly cause delay in the Senate's ability to process these nominations and prevent more judges from getting to work for the American people.

Senate Republicans will argue that the change in Senate precedent a few weeks ago on nominations is the cause of their refusal to cooperate, but history shows that this is simply not true. The truth is, from the first day President Obama took office, Senate Republicans pursued a path of delay and obstruction on judicial nominees that departed dramatically from Senate tradition. That it took 5 years into this Presidency for the rules to change has been the result of certain Senators, including me, who have been reluctant to change prior Senate practice. But once the government stops functioning, the right course of action is to do what needs to be done so that the American people have a government that works to make their lives better. The American people do not want to hear about tit-for-tat politics or their representatives playing the blame game. They are tired of Congress wasting time and resources when there is so much to be done. They want their representatives to work, vote, and fulfill their constitutional obligations. They want their representatives to fulfill their duty of advice and consent so that our courts have the necessary judges to provide speedy, quality justice.

The reality, unfortunately, falls short of the American peoples' expectation. During 2013, the same obstruction that has plagued the Senate during the first term of the Obama administration continued to delay the rate of confirmations to appointments on the Federal bench. The 113th Congress began with a high level of vacancies on the Federal Judiciary. As of January 2013, there were 77 vacancies in the Federal judiciary, and, of these, the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts determined 27 of them to be "judicial emergencies." Over the course of 2013, the number of vacancies has hovered around 90. Right now, at the end of the fifth year of the Obama administration, there are a total of 88 judicial vacancies, 36 of which are judicial emergency vacancies. In stark contrast, at the end of the fifth year of the Bush administration, there were less than 50 judicial vacancies, and only 16 of those were judicial emergency vacancies.

As the year closes, judicial vacancies remain at crisis levels. However, despite these high levels, Republican obstructionism continues to impose severe delays on the confirmations process, particularly in those States that faced significant obstruction from Republican home State Senators, such as Arizona and Texas.

A year after the American people voted to reelect President Obama, Senate Republicans decided to escalate their obstruction to an unimaginable level this year, preventing the President from filling any of the three vacancies on what is often considered the second most important court in the Nation—the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. Senate Republicans chose to filibuster all three nominees to that court without even considering their qualifications. This type of wholesale obstruction was simply unacceptable.

Republicans attempted to justify their opposition to filling any of the three vacancies on the D.C. Circuit by arguing that the court's caseload did not warrant the appointments. We all knew that this was a transparent attempt to prevent a Democratic President from appointing judges to this court. In 2003, the Senate unanimously confirmed John Roberts by voice vote to be the ninth judge on the D.C. Circuit—at a time when its caseload was lower than it is today. In fact, his confirmation marked the lowest caseload level per judge on the D.C. Circuit in 20 years. Not a single Senate Republican raised any concerns about whether the caseload warranted his confirmation, and during the Bush administration, they voted to confirm four judges to the D.C. Circuit, providing the court with 11 active judges. In light of this double standard, I finally agreed that past precedent had to be revisited because a faction of the minority party should not be permitted to nullify an election by blocking the President's nominees without regard to their qualifications.

I am pleased to say that in the last few weeks, after taking action, we were finally able to confirm Patricia Millett and Nina Pillard—two highly qualified attorneys—to the 9th and 10th seats on the D.C. Circuit. With the confirmation of these two women, there will now be five women and five men actively serving as judges on the D.C. Circuit—this is a historic first for any Federal appellate court. I am, however, disappointed that Senate Republicans refused to allow us to take a vote on Judge Robert Wilkins, another well qualified nominee whose confirmation would enable the D.C. Circuit to function at full strength, with 11 judges. I am hopeful that we will have a vote on his nomination early next year.

Other historic firsts for women serving on our Federal judiciary also occurred this year. In April, Jane Kelly became the first woman from Iowa to sit on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, and, in May, Shelly Dick was confirmed as the first woman to serve on the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Louisiana. Late last week, after the majority leader was forced to file cloture over Republican opposition to moving forward on district court nominees, three more nominees were confirmed to serve as the first women on their respective courts: Elizabeth Wolford, to be U.S. district judge for the Western District of New York; Landya McCafferty, to be U.S. district judge for the District of New Hampshire; and Susan Watters to be U.S. district judge for the District of Montana.

After an extraordinarily long delay of nearly 22 months since his nomination, we were also finally able to confirm Brian Davis to fill a judicial emergency vacancy on the U.S. District Court for the Middle District of Florida. I am disappointed that it required overcoming a Republican filibuster on his nomination. He is a superb nominee. The ABA Standing Committee on the Federal Judiciary has unanimously rated him to be "well qualified" to serve on the Federal bench. For the past 20 years he has served as a State court judge, where he has presided over 600 cases in both civil and criminal matters that have gone to verdict or judgment. Prior to becoming a State court judge, he served for a total of 9 years as a state prosecutor, including 3 years as chief assistant State attorney. Judge Davis also has experience in private practice, where he was a partner at the law firm of Terrell Hogan. He will make a fine Federal judge.

I am pleased that despite continued Republican attempts to block or delay confirmation of judicial nominees, we were able to continue to move forward on these and other nominees this year. I have heard, however, some suggestion that Republicans will now seek to delay judicial nominations by exploiting a Senate tradition known as the "blue slip." The Constitution requires that judicial appointments be made "with the Advice and Consent of the Senate." For nearly 100 years, chairmen of the Senate Judiciary Committee have sought to give meaning to this constitutional edict by a blue slip policy to ensure that Senators are given an opportunity to advise the President about potential judicial nominees before they are nominated to fill lifetime positions in their home State. A blue slip is a piece of paper sent by the chairman to home State Senators asking that it be signed and returned with an indication of whether they approve of or oppose the judicial nomination made by the President.

Over the years, other chairmen have taken a more flexible view of the blue slips, but during my chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee, I have protected the rights of Senators—whether Republican or Democrat—to be meaningfully consulted. Honoring the blue slip policy allows judicial nominations to move forward in committee only after receiving positive blue slips from home State Senators. Another improvement I made when I first became chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee in 2001 was to make home State Senators more accountable for their blue slip decisions by making the process transparent for the first time. I will continue to honor the blue slip policy as it currently stands, but I hope that Republicans will not abuse this tradition and force me to reconsider.

As we approach the new year, I hope that reasonable Republicans will join us in restoring the Senate's ability to fulfill its constitutional duties and do its work for the American people.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT

Mr. NELSON. Madam President, the Fiscal Year 2014 National Defense Authorization Act makes essential improvements for the well-being of the men and women serving in our armed services. It also seeks to ease the transition from active duty to veteran status for servicemembers by calling on the Department of Defense and the Department of Veterans' Affairs to fix the lack of communication between their electronic health records. This provision and countless others are why I was pleased to see this legislation pass last night with overwhelming bipartisan support. Unfortunately I was unable to record my vote but had I been in the Chamber I would have voted in favor of this important piece of legislation. I supported this legislation when it was reported out of the Armed Services Committee. I would also like to thank Senator LEVIN and Senator INHOFE for their tireless efforts to complete this bill and fulfill our commitments to the men and women serving our country.

Mr. WARNER. Madam President, I would like to call attention to a provision within the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2014.

I would like to thank Chairman LEVIN, Ranking Member INHOFE, Chairman MCKEON, and Ranking Member SMITH, for including in this year's National Defense Authorization Act my amendment, with Senators COLLINS, KAINE, and GRASSLEY, to expand whistleblower and enhance protections for servicemembers who alert authorities to misconduct that includes sexual assaults and other sexual misconduct. I would like to thank my colleagues, Senators COLLINS, KAINE and GRASSLEY, for their partnership in winning this breakthrough in newly-strengthened free speech rights for our troops when they defend accountability in the military services. It is important to be clear about a cornerstone of our amendment, which is the guaranteed right to an administrative due process hearing in all whistleblower retaliation cases. New subsection f(3)(B) provides that if the Secretary does not make a finding of illegal retaliation and order corrective action, the case shall be forwarded to the appropriate Board for Corrections of Military Records to receive a mandatory administrative due process hearing, "when appropriate." There should not be any confusion. It is always appropriate to forward the case for hearing if jurisdiction exists for whistleblower retaliation alleged in the servicemember's complaint. It is only inappropriate if another provision of law provides the relevant rights, procedures and remedies to resolve the complaint, such as when the alleged misconduct is sexual harassment per se as opposed to whistleblower retaliation for disclosing sexual harassment.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Madam President, I rise today to welcome the final passage of the 2014 National Defense Authorization Act—frequently referred to as the NDAA. I would like to thank Armed Services Committee Chairman LEVIN and Ranking Member INHOFE, as well as Chairman MCKEON and Ranking Member SMITH in the House of Representatives, for their tireless and collaborative efforts in securing this critical piece of legislation. Although the NDAA did not go through the optimal amendment process, its passage today extends the necessary authorities to implement our national security strategy and support and protect Colorado's military community. As we head into the second session of the 113th Congress, I hope that we will remain mindful of the importance of a full and robust debate and ensure that the 2015 NDAA is open to amendments on the floor of the Senate.

As the chairman of the Strategic Forces Subcommittee, I also want to thank my friend and colleague on the committee, Ranking Member SESSIONS. Senator SESSIONS has a long tenure on the subcommittee, and I have benefited from his experience. I am grateful for the collegiality he has shown over the past year, and I look forward to starting our work together again in the next session.

I would also like to recognize the staff of the subcommittee for their tremendous support and dedication. For Senator SESSIONS and his subcommittee staff, I want to thank Dr. Robert Soofer, who advises on nuclear and missile defense matters, and Daniel Lerner, who advises on space, intelligence and cybersecurity. I also want to thank both Pete Landrum, Senator SESSIONS' senior defense policy adviser and Casey Howard, my military legislative assistant. On my subcommittee staff, Jonathan Epstein, deserves great credit for his work on nuclear weapons, space, and a host of other issues. Richard Fieldhouse, who advises on missile defense, and Kirk McConnell, who assists me on cyber and intelligence, also have my thanks and respect. Finally, special thanks to Lauren Gillis, the subcommittee's staff assistant, for her countless hours of preparation for our hearings, working with witnesses, and organizing our subcommittee markup.

In closing, I would like to highlight one provision of the 2014 NDAA, section 3112, which establishes an Office of Cost Analysis and Program Evaluation in the National Nuclear Security Administration, NNSA. I want to be clear that the establishment of this new office was not meant to in any way alter the responsibilities and oversight of the Naval Reactors Program—a division of the NNSA that has a long track record of producing high quality projects on time and within budget. The Naval Reactors Program has traditionally been semi-independent within the NNSA, being dual hatted with fleet activities of the Navy, whose overall responsibilities are found and carried out under Executive Order No. 12344. While section 3112 speaks to the NNSA as a whole, it was not our intent to include the Naval Reactors Program under the purview of the new Office of Cost Analysis and Program Evaluation. During the next session, I will work with my colleagues in both the House and the Senate to correct this provision and reflect that intent.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, it is a great pleasure to thank my colleagues, Senators WARNER, COLLINS, and KAINE, for their partnership in winning this breakthrough in newly-strengthened whistleblower protections for our troops. It is important to be clear about a cornerstone of our amendment, which is the guaranteed right to an administrative due process hearing in all whistleblower retaliation cases. New subsection f(3)(B) provides that if the Secretary does not make a finding of illegal retaliation and order corrective action, the case shall be forwarded to the appropriate Board for Corrections of Military Records to receive a mandatory administrative due process hearing, "when appropriate." There should not be any confusion. It is always appropriate to forward the case for hearing if jurisdiction exists for whistleblower retaliation alleged in the servicemember's complaint. It is only inappropriate if another provision of law provides the relevant rights, procedures and remedies to resolve the complaint, such as when the alleged misconduct is sexual harassment per se as opposed to whistleblower retaliation for disclosing sexual harassment.

BANGLADESH ELECTIONS

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, last week Senators ENZI, MURPHY and I introduced a resolution on the political tensions in Bangladesh as that country prepares for a national election on January 5.

Since then, Senators BOXER, BOOZMAN, SHAHEEN, KAINE, BLUNT, and MENENDEZ have also cosponsored and yesterday the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimously in support of the measure.

The resolution calls for peaceful political dialogue between the country's various political factions in the hopes that the election will go forward in a credible and peaceful manner.

With so much else going on in the world from Ukraine to Iran, one might wonder why focus on elections in Bangladesh?

My interest is in part due to the role of Nobel Prize, Presidential Medal of Freedom, and Congressional Gold Medal winner Professor Mohammad Yunus, whom many may know from his pioneering work to help the world's poor through microfinance programs.

Professor Yunus has done so much to help the poor of Bangladesh and the world, particularly poor women, that former Senator Bob Bennett and I, as well as Congressman RUSH HOLT, led an effort several years ago to award him the Congressional Gold Medal. That bill passed both chambers of Congress in 2010, and earlier this year we gave him this award in the Capitol Rotunda.

It was a deeply moving event.

Sadly—and almost inexplicably—during the same period that Bangladesh was in such an international spotlight, its government pursued a mean-spirited and bewildering effort to undermine the Grameen Bank's independence and remove Professor Yunus from his leadership role.

I and others wrote repeatedly to Bangladeshi Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina urging her to not take such destructive and counterproductive measures.

Last year, Senator BOXER led a letter with all 17 women of the Senate to Hasina that called on the Bangladeshi government to stop interfering in the management of Grameen Bank.

Those Senators pointed out that its 8.3 million borrowers are mostly women who gain financial independence and help support their families through its important programs.

I am sorry to report that the Government of Bangladesh ignored all such calls and just last month essentially imposed state control over the bank.

Yunus responded by saying, "Grameen Bank was created as a bank owned by poor women, and managed by poor women. Its legal structure did not allow any government interference of any kind, except for regulatory oversight." The government-imposed changes, "fundamentally changing the character of the bank. With these amendments, the government has opened the door for its ultimate destruction. What a shame for the nation, and the whole world!"

So understandably this Senate resolution calls on the government of Bangladesh to restore the independence of the Grameen Bank.

There is more at stake in Bangladesh that should be of concern to the United States and the world.

You see, Bangladesh is a relatively stable, moderate, Muslim democracy with the world's seventh largest population and the world's fourth largest Muslim population.

And despite many difficult years since its independence from Pakistan in 1971, it has often stood out as an example of a moderate and diverse Muslim democracy—one that deserves the world's attention and support.

Yet, tragically, as Bangladesh nears another national election, it has experienced considerable political unrest with hundreds perishing in violent clashes.

The country's opposition coalition has called for numerous nationwide strikes and transportation blockades, resulting in further violence, instability, and the disruption of students' abilities to attend school.

Last week United Nations Assistant Secretary General Oscar Fernandez Taranco visited Bangladesh to try and foster political dialogue between Bangladesh's political parties and leaders to bring a halt to the violence and allow for a credible and peaceful election period.

His efforts are to be supported, and this resolution reaffirms his call for peaceful political dialogue.

The squabbles between Bangladesh's political parties distract from the real progress that has been made—and should continue to be made—in alleviating the country's widespread poverty.

For example, between 2005 and 2010 Bangladesh reduced its poverty rate from 40 to 31 percent of the population.

This is where the country's political leadership should continue to focus, not on perpetuating personal animosities between the two main political parties.

So our resolution states the obvious:

It condemns the political violence.

It urges the country's political leaders to engage directly in a dialogue toward free, fair, and credible elections; it expresses great concern about the country's political deadlock that distracts from so many other pressing problems; and it urges the Government of Bangladesh to ensure judicial independence, end harassment of human rights activists, and restore the independence of the Grameen Bank.

The United States relationship with Bangladesh is strong and includes considerable trade and cooperation on such issues as counterterrorism, counter-piracy, food security, and regional stability.

Peaceful democratic elections and greater respect for the Grameen Bank will only further those ties.

I urge the full Senate to pass this resolution before we adjourn.

PEPFAR

Mr. COBURN. Madam President, PEPFAR has been and remains one of the most successful foreign policy achievements of the United States in the 21st century. This unprecedented humanitarian effort has touched millions, either through providing life-saving HIV/AIDS treatment, keeping together families impacted by the disease, caring for orphans, or improving the lives of others affected and infected by this horrible disease as well as tuberculosis and malaria. In an era of war abroad and deep political divisions at home, this program is one that has bipartisan support here and has generated good will toward the United States abroad. Every American should be proud of the success of this initiative as it represents what is great about our Nation and has restored hope for so many.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee worked hard to get S. 1545, the PEPFAR Stewardship and Oversight Act, through this Chamber. I thank Chairman MENENDEZ and Ranking Member CORKER for their cooperation and attentiveness in the process. This bill, which became law on December 2, is a positive step toward increasing program transparency and accountability in PEPFAR's annual report. It also renews and strengthens several components of the last reauthorization, including Global Fund governance provisions and the requirement that more than 50 percent of PEPFAR's appropriations to be spent on treatment and essential medical care.

This latter component, the treatment spending requirement, is one of the key accountability provisions my colleagues and I fought for in the past. In short, PEPFAR is required to spend at least 50 percent of its appropriations on essential medical treatment and care. Members on both sides of the aisle voted for authorizations with this treatment floor. Congress sought to prevent the program from straying from its core mission of treating and caring for patients. If PEPFAR were to lose sight of this goal, the result would not just be a waste of money, it would be lives lost on account of mission creep. We cannot let PEPFAR become another well-intentioned but unfruitful and nebulous international development program.

This statutory treatment floor has changed somewhat over the last decade, but the purpose has remained the same throughout: to focus more than half of PEPFAR's total appropriations on essential treatment and medical care. Unfortunately, as I will discuss in a moment, the Office of the U.S. Global Coordinator, OGAC, at the Department of State has not been following this law. Rather, it has excluded a significant portion of its appropriations from the calculation and is now spending less than is statutorily required on treatment and care.

The original PEPFAR authorization in 2003, P.L. 108-25, first included a treatment spending floor that said, "Not less than 55 percent of the amounts appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations . . . shall be expended for therapeutic medical care of individuals infected with HIV, of which such amount at least 75 percent should be expended for the purchase and distribution of antiretroviral pharmaceuticals and at least 25 percent should be for related care."

Similarly, the full reauthorization of PEPFAR in 2008, P.L. 110-293, included a treatment requirement that said, "More than half of the amounts appropriated for bilateral global HIV/AIDS assistance . . . shall be expended for . . . (1) antiretroviral treatment for HIV/AIDS; (2) clinical monitoring of HIV-seropositive people not in need of antiretroviral treatment; (3) care for associated opportunistic infections; (4) nutrition and food support for people living with HIV/AIDS; and (5) other essential HIV/AIDS-related medical care for people living with HIV/AIDS."

This version expanded somewhat on the original category of "therapeutic medical care," but Congress maintained a minimum percentage of appropriations intended for direct care and treatment services.

Lastly, the recent PEPFAR legislation, S.1545, now P.L. 113-56, reiterates and even clarifies the treatment requirement further. This new law says more than half of the funds appropriated for activities under section 104A of the Foreign Assistance Act—which contains all of PEPFAR's functions ranging from drug treatment to training health professionals and capacity building—need to be going to these five categories of essential medical treatment and care.

None of these definitions from laws in 2003, 2008, or 2013 has allowed for an exclusion of certain components of PEPFAR's funding from the treatment calculation. No appropriations bill has implemented an exception to the calculation. The charge and requirement has always been to examine total PEPFAR appropriations in a given year and ensure at least half goes to services in these five categories.

As I said previously, PEPFAR management has not been abiding by the letter of the law. The Office of the U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator at the Department of State has been excluding several spending categories from the treatment and care calculation. A smaller denominator makes it easier for the program to meet the treatment calculation. In reality, hundreds of millions of dollars more should be going to treatment and care if the law were followed. Millions more patients could be receiving lifesaving antiretroviral treatment.

A Government Accountability Office report released in March 2013 highlighted how OGAC has been excluding a significant portion of PEPFAR appropriations, categorized as "Other" activities, from this calculation. In fiscal year 2008, this "Other" category accounted for about 15 percent of PEPFAR country budgets, or $574 million. By fiscal year 2012, the category increased to 21 percent of PEPFAR country budgets, or $710 million. Over the same timeframe, total spending on treatment and care decreased from $1.8 billion to $1.4 billion.

This "Other" category includes spending for health systems strengthening, strategic information, management and operations, and laboratory strengthening. OGAC told GAO it had excluded the "Other" category based on OGAC's interpretation of the intent of the treatment spending requirement. They have also not included any of OGAC's administrative costs.

As one directly involved with PEPFAR throughout my time in the Senate, I can say firmly the treatment spending requirement was intended for all of PEPFAR's appropriations, not just a portion.

PEPFAR's operational plan for fiscal year 2011 shows that PEPFAR received about $5.0 billion for all bilateral activities, including headquarters administrative costs. To be meeting the treatment spending requirement as written, PEPFAR should have planned to spend about $2.5 billion on treatment and care. Instead, it spent $1.6 billion. That figure about $900 million short of what should be going to direct treatment and care services that fit the categories already in law.

I understand the need for PEPFAR to invest in some capacity building and other ancillary development. A nation needs labs to check HIV test results, for example. Labs and clinics need health professionals, and a host government needs to be able to track the program results. However, we have seen time and again how development programs get off track, lose focus, and fail to meet their goals. They spend money on activities that are noble but ineffective. For example, in 2012, the U.S. Agency for International Development used millions of dollars to fund an economic development program in Morocco that included pottery classes, even though Moroccans have been making pottery for thousands of years. Not only so, but the classes were poorly designed. The instructor only used materials not available in Morocco, and the class's translator was not fluent in English. Ultimately, the development program failed.

To prevent mission creep and failure, Congress put a treatment and care requirement in law to ensure more than half of go to direct treatment and care services, which have a clear and measurable impact on the lives of those living with this HIV/AIDS.

I call on PEPFAR to follow the letter of the law when it comes to spending on treatment and care. All PEPFAR appropriations should be entered into the denominator of this equation. No funding will be lost from doing so. Rather, hundreds of millions of additional dollars will be going to essential treatment and care. Millions of new patients could start receiving new life.

I will continue to monitor whether PEPFAR is following this definition in the future. Given that 26 million people worldwide need antiretroviral treatment, we cannot afford to let PEPFAR get off track.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, first, I want to say I appreciate Senator COBURN's work on the PEPFAR Program. He has been a tireless advocate and has made this program better, more efficient, and more focused. PEPFAR has saved millions of lives since President Bush signed it into law in 2003. I was pleased to work with Chairman MENENDEZ and our colleagues in the House on legislation, the PEPFAR Stewardship and Oversight Act, which continues its important work, and I truly appreciate the support Senator COBURN offered to this critical effort. PEPFAR is the single most successful program to date to address the HIV/AIDS epidemic in Africa and the largest commitment by any nation to combat a single disease internationally. In fact, due to PEPFAR, almost 6 million people are receiving life-sustaining antiretroviral treatment, millions have avoided infection, and more than 11 million pregnant women received HIV testing and counseling last year. PEPFAR has also provided care and support to nearly 15 million people, including more than 4.5 million orphans and vulnerable children. This is significant progress, but there is still work to do. The PEPFAR Stewardship and Oversight Act renews Congress's commitment to this vital program and ensures this work will continue our progress towards an AIDS-free generation.

As my colleague Senator COBURN has stated, a provision in the PEPFAR Stewardship and Oversight Act extends authority from the Tom Lantos and Henry J. Hyde U.S. Global Leadership Against HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria Reauthorization Act of 2008 that requires "more than half of the amounts appropriated for bilateral global HIV/AIDS assistance" be spent on programs that provide treatment and care to HIV/AIDS patients. We included an extension of this authority in the 2013 bill because it is important to ensure the program remains focused on treating and caring for patients. The plain language of the provision requires the "more than half" calculation to be made on all "amounts appropriated or otherwise made available to carry out the provisions of section 104A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961." We expect this requirement to be followed going forward.

I look forward to working with Senator COBURN and the Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator to ensure that the provision as intended by Congress is properly carried out.

Mr. CORKER. Mr. President, the Globe Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis and Malaria has recently made significant improvements and reforms, including building new data collection and reporting mechanisms. S. 1545, the PEPFAR Stewardship and Oversight Act, takes advantage of these reforms and provides for additional public reporting from the Global Fund on import duties and taxes on Global Fund services and commodities under section 4(b)(1)(F). This reporting is intended to identify discriminatory duties and taxes levied upon the Global Fund, and therefore should not be construed to require the reporting of de minimus administrative charges or nondiscriminatory fees. In addition, in order to allow the Global Fund time to develop the data collection systems required to implement this reporting, it is our intention that these requirements become fully effective as soon as is practicable, but no later than the end of the 2015 fiscal year. In the meantime, the Global Fund's efforts to meet the requirements of section 4(b)(1)(F) with additional reporting on these matters should be sufficient to meet the requirements in our legislation.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. President, I thank the ranking member for his comments and work on this legislation. The reforms being made by the Global Fund are important and we both share the view that the reporting requirements for the Global Fund on import duties and taxes ought to be understood to provide flexibility until the end of the 2015 fiscal year.

NATIONAL PEDIATRIC RESEARCH NETWORK ACT

Mr. BROWN. Madam President, I wish to praise the passage of the National Pediatric Research Network Act, signed into law by President Obama on November 27, 2013. I was proud to introduce this bipartisan legislation along with my colleague and friend Senator WICKER.

I am a longtime supporter of expanded pediatric medical research and, as a member of the House and later of the Senate, have fought to increase funding to carry out these essential efforts. This bipartisan bill promises to build on the important body of work in pediatric research that the National Institutes of Health, NIH, already supports.

This law authorizes the NIH to establish a number of multi-institution consortia conducting high-impact research into the most challenging pediatric issues of our day. These research networks will allow for the participation of multiple institutions through the use of a "hub and spoke" arrangement, with one or more central pediatric medical centers collaborating with other supporting sites.

Network applicants can focus on any type of pediatric research agenda, from basic laboratory research through later stage translational research and clinical investigations on a variety of pediatric disorders and diseases.

Importantly, the act will bridge the research gap between pediatric and adult conditions. Only 5 to 10 percent of the NIH's annual research budget is devoted to pediatric research, despite children comprising approximately 20 percent of the U.S. population.

Additionally, this act promises to strengthen our collective focus on pediatric rare diseases or conditions, such as spinal muscular atrophy, muscular dystrophy, Down syndrome, and Fragile X.

We are all aware that the NIH faces tight budgets and that these fiscal challenges are not going away overnight. Thus, Members on both sides of the aisle came together in support of this research model to promote efficiency and the sharing of resources. Modeled after the successful Cancer Centers and other successful networked initiatives, this law reflects the current fiscal climate and seeks to do more with less.

The National Pediatric Research Network Act could not have been enacted without the support of thousands of families, care providers, pediatric researchers and research institutions across the country. I would especially like to thank FightSMA and the Coalition for Pediatric Medical Research for organizing a grassroots effort that led to strong bipartisan support in both houses of Congress, and to Cincinnati Children's Hospital Medical Center, Nationwide Children's Hospital in Columbus, and Akron Children's Hospital for their endorsement and hard work in support of the bill.

The legislation received the strong support of Parent Project Muscular Dystrophy, the Children's Hospital Association, Federation of Pediatric Organizations, Kakkis EveryLife Foundation, National Down Syndrome Society, and the National Organization for Rare Disorders.

Finally, I would like to recognize Madison Reed, a valiant Ohio teenager living with SMA, for sharing her story with me when I visited Nationwide Children's Hospital earlier this year. The National Pediatric Research Network Act has given hope to thousands of families like hers, across Ohio and the country, that collaborative pediatric research will speed knowledge from bench to bedside, allowing young people with medical concerns to lead healthier and fuller lives.

TRIBUTE TO JACK HANNA

Mr. PORTMAN. Madam President, today I wish to honor "Jungle" Jack Hanna for his 35 years of service to the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium. Jack is a world-renowned conservationist, author, television personality, lifelong adventurer, and champion of the Columbus Zoo.

In 1978, Jack Hanna joined a small zoo in Columbus, Ohio as the executive director. The challenges he faced as director were staggering. The zoo was outdated, the animals had little contact with the outside world, and the attendance was low. Jack worked to increase attendance by offering educational and entertainment programs at the zoo. Under his leadership, the Columbus Zoo and Aquarium became the world-class facility it is today. The Columbus Zoo is a state-of-the-art park with exceptional attractions such as Zoombezi Bay waterpark and Jungle Jack's Landing. The park has also expanded its reach outside of Columbus to include The Wilds near Cambridge, OH.

Jack's work as a conservationist has saved endangered animals and habitats around the globe. He helped found Partners in Conservation, and is an active supporter of St. Jude Children's Research Hospital, the Mountain Gorilla Veterinary Project, and the SeaWorld Busch Gardens Conservation Fund.

Jack was named director emeritus in 1992 of the Columbus Zoo but has continued to spur economic development and promote central Ohio since that time. Jack has made countless television appearances since 1983 on shows such as "Good Morning America," the "Late Show with David Letterman," FOX News programs, and CNN News programs. We still watch him today on his latest syndicated TV series, "Jack Hanna's Into the Wild."

I have had the opportunity to meet with Jack over the years and have witnessed his genuine love of animals and wildlife firsthand. He is a passionate advocate for conservation, and his skill for sharing the majesty of nature has opened the minds of millions of readers, viewers, and listeners.

The Columbus Zoo is an asset to central Ohio because of Jack Hanna's work and inspiration. I congratulate him on his service to our State.

TRIBUTE TO NICHOLE DISTEFANO

Mrs. McCASKILL. Madam President, as we come to the end of 2013, I wish to pay tribute to a friend and a stellar long-term staff member of mine, Nichole Distefano. Nichole left my office earlier this year to pursue an exceptional opportunity with the Environmental Protection Agency. She spent more than 6 years as an indispensable member of my Washington, DC, staff and was an exceptional member of staffs of mine going back to 2004.

Nichole is affectionately known as "H" in our office, initially because of the "h" in her first name and later for reasons best not shared on the Senate floor but related to her tenacity and direct nature. Nichole was the absolute rock and foundation of our legislative staff during her tenure.

She was, in fact, the first legislative aide that I hired. It did not matter—although it was a shock to some—that she had no previous experience in DC. I knew she would dive right into her responsibilities with attention to detail and skill. In fact, within 2 years on the staff, she assumed responsibility for my government reform portfolio, which encompassed the issues that I focused on most intently during my first 6 years in the Senate. During that time we promoted her four times and continually increased her responsibility. In each case, she performed beyond even my highest expectations. There was no challenge and no issue Nichole could not tackle.

Nichole's policy accomplishments are too many to number. She was our lead staffer on earmark reform work; whistleblower legislation for both Federal employees and contractors; our complex regulatory reform efforts; everything and anything that had to do with empowering our inspectors general. She led all the office work on screening policies at the airports along with handling innumerable challenging situations with the GSA in regards to Missouri and was the lead staffer in writing bills to curb some of the excesses that we discovered in that Agency. She also patiently waded through all of the difficult policy and politics of energy issues, including the challenging and politically sensitive debate on cap and trade. There was no detail too small for Nichole to master and no nuance she could not grasp. One of her earliest policy responsibilities had to do with an energy issue much smaller than cap and trade, however. She prepared legislation dealing with the measurement of gasoline as it relates to temperature—hot gas was not the most exciting issue. It involved no bright lights and no headlines, just hard, complicated, solid, public policy work—the exact kind of thing Nichole thrived at. Those issues that take more than a cut-and-paste memo were Nichole's specialty.

I have known Nichole since she was 8 years old, as the granddaughter of a strong public servant, Carole Roper Park Vaughn, who served with me in the Missouri State Legislature. As Nichole ran around Carole's Jefferson City office, Carole helped instill in her that leadership spark. In 2004, when I ran for Governor, I hired Nichole for the first time to help run our Kansas City volunteer crew. By the end, most people on staff thought she was the one really running our KC office—and for all intents and purposes, she was.

By our 2006 Senate race, she became my rural outreach director, helping us find some of the gems of our campaign, like Sweet Corn Charlie. On both campaigns she was always willing to do whatever was needed at any level from literally boosting me up onto an RV so we could grab a picture of our "McCaskill for Senate"-wrapped RV in front of my family's old flour mill in Houston, MO, to walking into a field office unannounced one day and saying she was there to go door-to-door, despite her senior role on the campaign.

She is a take-charge kind of woman but taking charge by immersing herself in a subject. That became her trademark. We all grew to expect her remarkable technical competence on very complicated issues and her penchant for digging deeper to find the real answer. Of course, at times, she let her desire to dig deep bleed into her personal life, too. Just ask her new husband Ryan what her first two responses to his marriage proposal were: "Are you serious?"

Because of this knack for asking the right questions and learning the detailed answers, I always listened to what she had to say—I did not always agree, of course, but listened nonetheless. As one of her male colleagues said, "She looks tiny and sweet, but everyone is a little terrified of her because she's tougher and smarter than most everyone out there." And have no doubt, when Nichole believes something, she will let you know, and she will fight for it. I cherish this attribute because in this kind of job you need people who aren't just smart, aren't just aggressive, but who are real and honest.

Now no one stays terrified of Nichole for too long because they figure out how genuine she is, and funny too. The gifted members of our staffs are both intense and blessed with great humor.

Our legislative correspondents have been lucky to have her as a mentor, as well—someone who expects a high level of performance, gives praise when it is due, and encourages professional development. It is no accident that one of the first LCs to work for her grew into one of my staff's most important legislative assistants today.

It is always bittersweet for me when these kinds of junctures happen—these times when you want your staff to blast forward and make you proud as much as you want them to stay—because they have been so essential to your work.

With Nichole now working as a senior advisor within the Office of Congressional and Intergovernmental Relations at the EPA, she is providing the kind of public service that embraces intellect, curiosity, and precision. It is why they brought her on, of course. They quickly saw what we already knew. They are benefiting greatly from her deep vein of common sense and her refusal to stop working until she has asked every question and gotten every answer.

I am proud to say thank you to Nichole Distefano as 2013 comes to an end, to express my deep gratitude for all she has done for me, for Missouri, and for our great Nation over so many years. I am proud to see her continue to grow and excel. I know she is doing exceptional things in her new position. She is my friend. She is a rock. And I miss her.

REMEMBERING PETTY OFFICER OBENDORF

Ms. MURKOWSKI. Madam President, I am here today to pay tribute to the life of PO3 Travis Obendorf, a Coast Guard boatswain mate, who passed away on December 18, 2013, from injuries he sustained during the successful rescue of 22 individuals from the disabled fishing vessel Alaska Mist in the Bering Sea on November 11, 2013.

Petty Officer Obendorf, whose nickname was "Obie," gave the ultimate sacrifice for his Nation, and in doing so he assisted in the rescue of 22 mariners who otherwise may have been lost to the sea.

Petty Officer Obendorf was a native of Idaho Falls, ID. He enlisted in the Coast Guard in 2004 and quickly became a leader within his boot camp platoon. He proudly served aboard the Coast Guard cutters Alert and Waesche and deployed to Bahrain as member of Coast Guard Patrol Forces Southwest Asia. He also served at Coast Guard Station Boston, MA.

Upon reporting aboard Coast Guard cutter Waesche on 26 June 2013, Petty Officer Obendorf quickly integrated into the Deck Division and began rapidly pursuing his qualifications. During Waesche's shakedown cruise prior to an Alaska deployment, Petty Officer Obendorf qualified as a helmsman and lookout and made significant progress in all other qualification areas. One month into Waesche's August to November 2013 Alaska deployment, Petty Officer Obendorf qualified in basic and advanced damage control, as boatswain's mate of the watch, helicopter tie-down crewmember, and boat crewmember on all three of Waesche's cutter boats. Less than a month later, Petty Officer Obendorf added boarding team member and antiterrorism force protection watch stander to his list of qualifications. Petty Officer Obendorf's rapid qualification in a wide variety of watch stations resulted in him being significantly involved in almost all aspects of Waesche's operations. His efforts as a boat crew and boarding team member were critical in the Waesche's execution of over 40 fisheries and recreational law enforcement boardings during the 2013 Alaska deployment.

When Waesche was diverted for the search and rescue case involving fishing vessel Alaska Mist, Petty Officer Obendorf was selected as a boat crewmember for what would be a challenging rescue operation. Petty Officer Obendorf immediately began assisting his shipmates and preparing for the operation, which would involve removing 14 nonessential Alaska Mist personnel as well as passing a towing line to the vessel in order to take it in tow.

Once on scene, Waesche launched Petty Officer Obendorf and the rest of the boat crew aboard a Coast Guard small boat to begin the rescue operation. As the Coast Guard small boat came alongside Alaska Mist, one boat crewmember went aboard the vessel to brief the crew and rig the rescue ladder. Once this was complete, Petty Officer Obendorf began guiding Alaska Mist crewmembers down the ladder and into the Coast Guard small boat. Petty Officer Obendorf showed exceptional skill and focus as he timed the rolls of both vessels and a significant swell to ensure the safety of the crewmembers descending the ladder. Despite deteriorating weather conditions, Petty Officer Obendorf courageously and successfully guided five Alaska Mist crewmembers to safety.

The Coast Guard small boat returned to Waesche with the first group of passengers and entered the stern notch with Petty Officer Obendorf positioned on the bow to assist in securing the boat for recovery. During the recovery evolution, Petty Officer Obendorf received a severe head injury. Waesche completed the operation, ultimately rescuing 22 people and towing the fishing vessel to safety, but despite the lifesaving first aid of his shipmates and the excellent care of two medical centers, Petty Officer Obendorf succumbed to his injuries on 18 December 2013.

Petty Officer Obendorf will surely be missed by his family, loved ones, and shipmates. I am thankful for his service and honored by his sacrifice.

TRIBUTE TO NELLIE FREEMAN

Mr. CARDIN. Madam President, staff turnover is part of life in the Senate, just as it is in any other institution. But some departures are particularly bittersweet. Today is the last day Helen Eleanor Freeman will be working in my office; she is retiring after more than 23 years of faithful—and joyful service—to me and to former Senator Paul Sarbanes, to the Senate, and to the people of Maryland.

Her name is Helen Eleanor Freeman, but throughout the Senate and beyond Capitol Hill, everyone knows her as Nellie. She is an avid volleyball player and her recreational activity led, through another player, to her first job in the Senate, with Senator Sarbanes, in 1989. When Senator Sarbanes retired and I was elected to replace him, he was adamant that I must hire Nellie as I filled out my Senate staff. He told me, “There is no one quite like Nellie,” and over the past 7 years I have been fortunate to have Nellie on my staff, I certainly have come to agree with that assessment. Nellie is unique. She is the “glue” that holds our office together. While I am happy for her, I am sad she will be leaving the office and I know the rest of my staff shares that assessment.

Nellie is an avid fan of the local teams, especially the Baltimore Orioles. So I will use a sports analogy from baseball. Nellie is like the super utility infielder—the person who can play any position well, the consummate team player. Name just about any task or function in the office, and Nellie has performed it—manning the phones, sorting and responding to constituent correspondence, helping to select, train, and supervise the interns—you name it and Nellie has done it.

So there are the official duties and there are the unofficial duties. With regard to the unofficial duties, Nellie has been the go-to person when it comes to organizing office parties to celebrate birthdays, afterhours social events, staff book clubs, and so forth. That is the “glue” I was talking about a moment ago. The Senate can be a difficult place in which to work, both for Senators and staff. Nellie has played a critical role in helping my staff feel more like a welcoming family and that redounds not only to my benefit, but to the benefit of the Senate.

Nellie is unfailingly calm, courteous, solicitous, kind, and happy. Her personality shines through and her cheerfulness is infectious, much appreciated, and an example for all of us. Nellie makes friends with everyone: constituents, colleagues, other Senate staff, Senators. She makes it easier and more pleasant for everyone to work here. That is no small accomplishment.

Nellie is retiring today, but she is far from having a “retiring” personality so I know she will remain as busy and engaged as ever. She has volleyball and book clubs and volunteer activities and the Orioles. During the season, I didn’t need to read the sports page to determine whether the Orioles had won the night before. If they had won, Nellie would be at work in the morning resplendent in black and orange attire.

Most of all, Nellie has her beloved husband Bob Ham and the rest of her large family—her parents Bob and Molly Freeman; her siblings David, Mary, Emily, and Teddy; in-laws Jessica, Andy, and Nadia; and her nieces and nephews Rachel, Zach, Francesca, Koby, Saul, Ben, Molly, and Amelie and most of them live in the area. It is a big, raucous family filled with the same love and good cheer Nellie exudes.

So to Nellie Freeman on the occasion of her retirement after more than 23 years of serving the people of Maryland and all Americans, thank you for your exemplary service and, above all, thank you for your friendship. Go O’s!

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

JUVENILE JUSTICE REFORM SUCCESS

• Mr. MURPHY. Madam President, as a longtime advocate for youth in the juvenile justice system during my time in the Connecticut State Legislature and in Congress, I congratulate my home State of Connecticut on new evidence that its major juvenile justice reforms over the past 10 years have been a resounding success. These reforms are based on the principle that children are fundamentally different from adults, and they should not be criminalized just like adult offenders. While other States have begun to recognize this principle and put it into practice, my home State has led the way. I am proud to note that Connecticut has achieved the largest reduction in its confinement of minors of any state in the United States over the last decade.

Like many other States, Connecticut adopted tough-on-crime policies that drastically increased the number of children locked up through its juvenile court system in the 1990s and early 2000s. But in the mid-2000s, the State recognized that these policies were ineffective, costly, and worst of all, ended up harming children more than helping them. Connecticut began to reform its juvenile system, passing a law in 2005 that prohibited the detention of youth for violating a court order in any status offense case.

Then, in 2007, Connecticut passed Raise the Age, a law that has ended the prosecution of most 16- and 17-year-old teenagers in the adult criminal system and returned them to the juvenile system where they belong. Not an easy victory, Raise the Age took more than a decade of efforts by children and families, youth advocates, and State legislators to pass and fully implement.

Together with other State reforms, the status offense change and Raise the Age have led Connecticut to cut its rate of juvenile incarceration by 60 percent between 2001 and 2011. This drop—documented in a report by the National Juvenile Justice Network and the Texas Public Policy Foundation entitled “The Comeback and Coming-from-Behind States: An Update on Youth Incarceration in the United States” and released just this week—is the largest in the Nation. More than any other State, Connecticut has succeeded in locking up fewer children and turning to more effective policies instead, such as relying increasingly on community-based treatment and cutting back on law enforcement referrals for school discipline issues.

One of the key architects of the Raise the Age effort in Connecticut was Liz Ryan, a nationally known and leading juvenile justice advocate. Liz is the president and CEO of the Campaign for Youth Justice, an organization she founded in 2005, around the same time that advocates in Connecticut first formed the Connecticut Juvenile Justice Alliance, CTJJA. Liz consulted with the founders of CTJJA to mobilize the Raise the Age campaign, and our State was one of the first to receive her expertise and support.

Throughout her career, Liz has worked tirelessly to build and strengthen the juvenile justice field by guiding and supporting other advocates and organizations. She serves on the National Juvenile Justice & Delinquency Prevention Coalition, cochairs the Act 4 Juvenile Justice campaign, and serves on the working groups for the National Girls Institute and the National Center for Youth in Custody. Along with these advocacy organizations, Liz has worked closely with us in Congress to raise the profile of juvenile justice issues and push for greater reform.

Unfortunately for the many who have worked with Liz over the years, she is now stepping down from her current role. While she is irreplaceable and will certainly remain involved in the advocacy field, I congratulate her on the work she has accomplished over the course of several decades. On behalf of those of us in Connecticut, I also thank Liz for her commitment to our State's reform efforts. As was said best by the director of CTJJA, Abby Anderson, "If movements have best friends, Liz is the best friend of the Connecticut juvenile justice reform movement."

Connecticut's success in improving how it treats its youth is an example for the rest of the country. More and more evidence shows that my home State should be a model for other States as they look to reduce costs and improve outcomes for children. I will continue to highlight Connecticut's success and to expand its best practices at the Federal level so that we can help support other States make these same commonsense and humane reforms.●

BATAAN CORREGIDOR MEMORIAL BRIDGE

● Mr. BLUMENTHAL. Madam President, today I wish to commemorate the dedication of Bataan Corregidor Memorial Bridge in Weatogue, CT, earlier this month.

Crossing over the Farmington River in Connecticut, this bridge will now honor the patriotism and courage of the brave men from Connecticut and across the nation who fought in the Battles of Bataan and Corregidor in 1942 in the Pacific during World War II. From January to April 1942, American and Filipino forces fought Japanese soldiers along the Bataan Peninsula and the island of Corregidor in the Philippines. When both fell to the Japanese, an estimated 10,000 American and Filipino troops were killed and 20,000 wounded. Another 15,000 American and 60,000 Filipino troops were taken prisoner and forced to endure the Bataan Death March.

Dan Crowley of Simsbury and Darrel Stark of Stafford Springs, who were there in combat, are the last two surviving residents of Connecticut who fought in these historic battles in the United States Army following the attack on Pearl Harbor. After Mr. Crowley fought in the Battle of Bataan, he refused to surrender and swam to the island of Corregidor where he was later taken prisoner by the Japanese and endured 42 months in Japanese prison camp. His story is one of many heroic accounts from this theater during World War II.

The moving dedication ceremony included a flyover, musical performances, blessing of the bridge, ribbon cutting, and a stirring, closing bugle taps. I deeply appreciate the work of Mr. Crowley, State Senator Kevin Witkos, and the Connecticut Department of Transportation in creating this important symbol of our Nation's stalwart gratitude for the tremendous sacrifices of countless men during this series of battles. The Bataan Corregidor Memorial Bridge is vivid in its simplicity and elemental strength. It is not a grand structure, but like the men whose unimaginable courage we celebrate, it is there in its simple, physical strength.

We can never forget the service of the Greatest Generation, who protected our freedom and liberty—all who lost their lives and those who lived to pay tribute to their fellow comrades. This bridge will always be a memorial—a living memorial—used every day by all of us who will continue to remember and thank the brave patriots who fought so gallantly at Bataan and Corregidor.●

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and the second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 1961. An act to amend title 46, United States Code, to extend the exemption from the fire-retardant materials construction requirement for vessels operating within the Boundary Line; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN:

S. 1888. A bill to facilitate a land exchange involving certain National Forest System land in the Inyo National Forest, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Inyo National Forest Land Exchange Act.

This legislation will facilitate a land exchange between the operators of the Mammoth Mountain Ski Area in the Eastern Sierra Nevada region of California and the Inyo National Forest. Enactment of this bill will allow the ski resort to redevelop the parcel of land it currently leases from Forest Service, while providing the Forest Service with a combination of high resource value lands and a cash payment equal to the value of the exchanged land.

Since the Mammoth Mountain Ski Area, LLC, MMSA, began operations in 1953, Mammoth Mountain has grown to be one of the most popular ski areas in the United States, attracting up to two million visitors a year.

However, the Main Lodge area, which is located on approximately 21 acres of land leased by MMSA, has become outdated and inadequate to meet visitor needs. The Main Lodge building and Mammoth Mountain Inn are now more than 50 years old and require significant improvements and upgrades. Insufficient employee housing, parking and guest amenities must be corrected and skier staging and lift line queuing areas must be modernized. In order to make the necessary long-term investments, resort operators are seeking fee title to the land and have been working with the Inyo National Forest since 1998 to complete a land exchange.

Equal-value land exchanges involving Forest Service land are permitted under the Exchange Act. However, the typical land exchange procedures do not conform well to this particular exchange due to the complexity, size and scarcity of large, high resource value parcels in the Inyo National Forest. Consequently, this legislation would authorize a one-time exception to the Exchange Act to accomplish the proposed land exchange. Specifically, the bill would require the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire two parcels of private land outside, totaling approximately 1,500 acres, the boundary the Inyo National Forest in exchange for the conveyance of the 21 acre parcel within the forest currently leased to MMSA; accept a cash equalization payment in excess of the 25 percent value of the federal lands to fully compensate the Forest Service for the exchanged lands; and use the cash payment to acquire land or interests in land for additions to the National Forest System as such lands become available.

This bill will provide both economic and environmental benefits. The new construction that this bill will help facilitate will not only create new construction jobs during renovations, but will also allow the Ski Area to expand and improve its operations, creating more sustainable and permanent jobs. Additionally, the land MMSA will be transferring to the Forest Service includes high resource value lands that have long been desired for protection by local environmentalists and the Forest Service. This includes lands within the view shed of the Mono Basin National Scenic Area, the first designated National Scenic Area and a place of incredible natural beauty.

This legislation has bipartisan support. The bill was first introduced by Rep. BUCK MCKEON in June 2011 and passed the House in April 2012 by a vote of 376-2. It was reintroduced by Rep. PAUL COOK earlier this year with the support of both Democratic and Republican cosponsors and passed the House a second time on December 3, 2013.

Local government and community organizations also support this legislation, including the Mono County Board of Supervisors, the Mammoth Lakes Town Council, the Mammoth Lakes Chamber of Commerce, Mammoth Lakes Tourism, the Mono Lake Committee, and the Eastern Sierra Land Trust.

This trade has long been supported by noted environmentalists, including the late Andrea Mead Lawrence, after whom Congress earlier this year named a mountain in the nearby Sierra Nevada.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. Enactment of this bill will ensure the long term success of one of the Nation's top ski resorts and benefit the local and regional economy, while allowing the Forest Service to acquire high resource value lands that will be enjoyed by Americans for generations to come.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Mr. HATCH):

S. 1889. A bill to direct the United States Sentencing Commission with respect to penalties for the unlawful production of a controlled substance on Federal property or intentional trespass on the property of another that causes environmental damage; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Protecting Lands Against Narcotics Trafficking or PLANT Act of 2013 with my colleague and friend, Senator ORRIN HATCH.

This bill, which is similar to House legislation introduced by Representative JARED HUFFMAN, will help curb the severe environmental damage caused by illegal marijuana grows. I thank my friend and fellow Californian, Representative HUFFMAN, for his leadership on this issue.

Across our Nation, but especially in California, drug traffickers cultivate marijuana with zero regard for the environmental destruction it causes. Motivated solely by profits, these criminals illegally divert streams, poison wildlife, pollute watersheds and destroy the natural heritage that we have worked so hard to protect.

Recognizing the destructive ecological impact of illegal marijuana cultivation, this legislation directs the United States Sentencing Commission to review and amend Federal sentencing guidelines to account for the environmental crimes drug traffickers commit on public and trespassed lands.

Specifically, the bill instructs the Sentencing Commission to put in place sentencing guidelines that increase penalties for individuals who engage in any of the following activities while cultivating illegal drugs on Federal lands or while trespassing on another person's property:

Use of poisons or hazardous chemicals, such as pesticides and rodenticides; the diversion, redirection, obstruction, draining or impoundment of local aquifers, rivers or bodies of water; or significant removal of vegetation or clear cutting of timber.

In addition to environmental concerns, this legislation addresses the safety of our public lands. It directs the Sentencing Commission to provide guidelines increasing penalties on drug traffickers who use or possess a firearm while producing illegal drugs on federal or trespassed lands.

Last year alone, over 900,000 marijuana plants were eradicated at 471 sites on National Forest Lands. Sadly, this represents only a fraction of the total marijuana illegally grown in our National Parks, Forests and other public lands. In California, Operation Pristine, a recent effort to combat the environmental damage caused by illegal marijuana production, resulted in the removal of over 8,700 tons of trash including pesticides, batteries, fertilizers and propane tanks from environmentally sensitive lands.

Drug traffickers often use illegal pesticides smuggled in from Mexico, such as carbofuran, which contaminate California's water resources. They also use pesticides and rodenticides in an illegal manner, often on protected lands. These poisons are having a devastating impact on California's wildlife, including the Pacific Fisher, a member of the Weasel family being considered for listing as an endangered species.

Taxpayers are also being hit hard by the millions of dollars needed to clean up the environmental damage caused by illegal marijuana grows. Estimates put the cost of reclaiming land damaged by illicit marijuana growth at approximately $15,000 per acre. As you might expect, drug traffickers are not setting aside funds for this work, and the cost is passed on to the American people.

Illicit marijuana cultivation also damages the economy and hurts legitimate businesses. Timber companies, farmers and ranchers have had their operations disrupted by criminals growing marijuana illegally. Marijuana growers on agricultural lands, particularly in the Central Valley, divert thousands of gallons of scarce water from legitimate agriculture. In 2013 alone, California has identified over 1,800 grow sites in the Central Valley, including 406 in Tulare County and 537 in Fresno as of November.

As Chairman of the Senate Caucus on International Narcotics Control and also as a Senator who has worked to safeguard our country's natural resources, I believe that we cannot allow drug traffickers to destroy our public lands, pollute our waters and kill our wildlife with impunity. It is time that sentencing guidelines take into account the environmental damage that drug traffickers all too often cause. This legislation, directing the Sentencing Commission to review and amend its guidelines, will do just that.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1889

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(b) USE OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994 of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall amend and review the Federal Sentencing Guidelines and policy statements to ensure that the guidelines provide for a penalty enhancement of not less than 1 offense level for a violation of section 401(a) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841(a)) while on Federal property or intentionally trespassing on the property of another if the offense—

(2) FEDERAL SENTENCING GUIDELINES ENHANCEMENT.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994 of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall review and amend the Federal Sentencing Guidelines and policy statements to ensure that the guidelines provide for a penalty enhancement of not less than 1 offense level for a violation of section 401(a) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841(a)) if the offense involves the diversion, redirection, obstruction, or draining of an aquifer, spring, stream, river, or body of water or the clear cut of timber while cultivating or manufacturing a controlled substance on Federal property or while intentionally trespassing on the property of another.

(d) BOOBY TRAPS ON FEDERAL LAND.—Section 401(d)(1) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841(d)(1)) is amended by inserting “cultivated,” after “is being”.

(e) USE OR POSSESSION OF FIREARMS IN CONNECTION WITH DRUG OFFENSES ON FEDERAL LANDS.—Pursuant to its authority under section 994 of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall review and amend the Federal Sentencing Guidelines and policy statements to ensure that the guidelines provide for a penalty enhancement of not less than 1 offense level for a violation of section 401(a) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841(a)) if the offense involves the possession of a firearm while cultivating or manufacturing controlled substances on Federal lands or intentionally trespassing on the property of another.

By Ms. COLLINS (for herself and Mr. KING):

S. 1892. A bill to direct the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to establish a registry of certain veterans who were stationed at or underwent training at Canadian Forces Base Gagetown, New Brunswick, Canada, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill addressing an issue important to Maine veterans who served at Canadian Forces Base, CFB, Gagetown. Veterans who served there may have suffered from adverse health impacts due to exposure to the herbicide Agent Orange, which was used at CFB Gagetown in 1966 and 1967. This bill would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, VA, to establish a registry of U.S. veterans who served or trained at CFB Gagetown between 1956 and 2006 and have subsequently experienced health issues, which may have resulted from exposure to these chemicals. It also directs the VA to commission an independent study investigating any possible linkage between the spraying of Agent Orange at CFB Gagetown and subsequent health problems among the American soldiers who served or trained there. The legislation I am offering with Senator KING is similar to another bill that has been introduced by Congressman MIKE MICHAUD in the House of Representatives.

Protecting the health of those who have served our Nation is a solemn responsibility. I have heard from veterans in Maine about how they have suffered from diabetes, cancers, and respiratory illnesses. Many of these veterans fear their illnesses are linked to the use of Agent Orange in the 1960s. These veterans, however, have had difficulty in persuading the VA that their health problems are related to this chemical exposure.

By requiring the VA to establish a registry of these veterans, we recognize these widespread concerns and provide veterans with a way to make their claims known to the VA and to identify commonalities among their shared experiences. It also provides the VA with the ability to reach out to veterans on this issue of critical importance.

Last month, I personally raised this issue with the Canadian Minister of Defence. Many Canadian veterans who served or trained at CFB Gagetown voiced similar concerns with their government. He described how the Government of Canada found a way to appropriately compensate service members affected by the toxic chemicals used at Gagetown. Ultimately, the Canadian government approved one-time ex gratia payments of $20,000 for qualifying veterans who demonstrated that they were at CFB Gagetown during the days when the toxic agents were sprayed.

A crucial provision in this legislation requires the VA to commission an independent study that investigates the connection between health problems and exposure to Agent Orange at CFB Gagetown. Previously, I requested that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry conduct an investigation into whether Maine veterans were exposed to toxic chemicals while training at CFB Gagetown. A significant deficiency with the CDC report, however, was that it relied solely on existing Canadian government studies on this subject rather than conducting interviews of those who trained there. Many Maine veterans feel strongly that they suffered negative consequences from exposure to Agent Orange while training at Gagetown. The United States Government should conduct its own independent study with interviews.

This legislation keeps faith with our veterans by demonstrating that our government takes the allegations of exposure to Agent Orange seriously. The bill will help identify and bring together the shared experience of those who trained at CFB Gagetown. This bill will make it easier for the VA to conduct outreach on this issue pending any new developments. I look forward to working with Senator KING and all of my colleagues to pass this important bill.

[Whereas, in 1982, 1984, 1988, 1990, 1992, 1994, 1996, 2000, 2006, 2008, 2009, 2012, and 2013, Congress declared that it deplored the religious persecution by the Government of Iran of the Baha'i community and would hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all Iranian nationals, including members of the Baha'i Faith;

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom 2012 Report stated, "The Baha'i community has long been subject to particularly severe religious freedom violations in Iran. Baha'is, who number at least 300,000, are viewed as 'heretics' by Iranian authorities and may face repression on the grounds of apostasy.";

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom 2012 Report stated, "Since 1979, Iranian government authorities have killed more than 200 Baha'i leaders in Iran and dismissed more than 10,000 from government and university jobs.";

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom 2012 Report stated, "Baha'is may not establish places of worship, schools, or any independent religious associations in Iran.";

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom 2012 Report stated, "Baha'is are barred from the military and denied government jobs and pensions as well as the right to inherit property. Their marriages and divorces also are not recognized, and they have difficulty obtaining death certificates. Baha'i cemeteries, holy places, and community properties are often seized or desecrated, and many important religious sites have been destroyed.";

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom 2012 Report stated, "The Baha'i community faces severe economic pressure, including denials of jobs in both the public and private sectors and of business licenses. Iranian authorities often pressure employers of Baha'is to dismiss them from employment in the private sector.";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated, "The government prohibits Baha'is from teaching and practicing their faith and subjects them to many forms of discrimination that followers of other religions do not face.";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated, "According to [Iranian] law, Baha'i blood is considered 'mobah', meaning it can be spilled with impunity.";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated that "members of religious minorities, with the exception of Baha'is, can serve in lower ranks of government employment", and "Baha'is are barred from all leadership positions in the government and military";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated, "Baha'is suffered frequent government harassment and persecution, and their property rights generally were disregarded. The government raided Baha'i homes and businesses and confiscated large amounts of private and commercial property, as well as religious materials belonging to Baha'is.";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated, "Baha'is also are required to register with the police.";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated that "[p]ublic and private universities continued to deny admittance to and expelled Baha'i students" and "[d]uring the year, at least 30 Baha'is were barred or expelled from universities on political or religious grounds";

Whereas the Department of State 2011 International Religious Freedom Report stated, "Baha'is are regularly denied compensation for injury or criminal victimization.";

Whereas, on March 6, 2012, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran issued a report (A/HRC/19/66), which stated that "the Special Rapporteur continues to be alarmed by communications that demonstrate the systemic and systematic persecution of members of unrecognized religious communities, particularly the Baha'i community, in violation of international conventions" and expressed concern regarding "an intensive defamation campaign meant to incite discrimination and hate against Baha'is";

Whereas, on May 23, 2012, the United Nations Secretary-General issued a report (A/HRC/19/82), which stated that "the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief . . . pointed out that the Islamic Republic of Iran had a policy of systematic persecution of persons belonging to the Baha'i faith, excluding them from the application of freedom of religion or belief by simply denying that their faith had the status of a religion";

Whereas, on August 22, 2012, the United Nations Secretary-General issued a report (A/67/327), which stated, "The international community continues to express concerns about the very serious discrimination against ethnic and religious minorities in law and in practice, in particular the Baha'i community. The Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran expressed alarm about the systemic and systematic persecution of members of the Baha'i community, including severe socioeconomic pressure and arrests and detention. He also deplored the Government's tolerance of an intensive defamation campaign aimed at inciting discrimination and hate against Baha'is.”;

Whereas, on September 13, 2012, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran issued a report (A/67/369), which stated, “Reports and interviews submitted to the Special Rapporteur also continue to portray a disturbing trend with regard to religious freedom in the country. Members of both recognized and unrecognized religions have reported various levels of intimidation, arrest, detention and interrogation that focus on their religious beliefs.”, and stated, “At the time of drafting the report, 105 members of the Baha'i community were reported to be in detention.”;

Whereas, on November 27, 2012, the Third Committee of the United Nations General Assembly adopted a draft resolution (A/C.3/67/L.51), which noted, “[I]ncreased persecution and human rights violations against persons belonging to unrecognized religious minorities, particularly members of the Baha'i faith and their defenders, including escalating attacks, an increase in the number of arrests and detentions, the restriction of access to higher education on the basis of religion, the sentencing of twelve Baha'is associated with Baha'i educational institutions to lengthy prison terms, the continued denial of access to employment in the public sector, additional restrictions on participation in the private sector, and the de facto criminalization of membership in the Baha'i faith.”;

Whereas, on December 20, 2012, the United Nations General Assembly adopted a resolution (A/RES/67/182), which called upon the government of Iran “[t]o eliminate discrimination against, and exclusion of . . . members of the Baha'i Faith, regarding access to higher education, and to eliminate the criminalization of efforts to provide higher education to Baha'i youth denied access to Iranian universities,” and “to accord all Baha'is, including those imprisoned because of their beliefs, the due process of law and the rights that they are constitutionally guaranteed”;

Whereas, on February 28, 2013, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran issued a report (A/HRC/22/56), which stated, “110 Baha'is are currently detained in Iran for exercising their faith, including two women, Mrs. Zohreh Nikayin and Mrs. Taraneh Torabi, who are reportedly nursing infants in prison.”;

Whereas, in March and May of 2008, intelligence officials of the Government of Iran in Mashhad and Tehran arrested and imprisoned Mrs. Fariba Kamalabadi, Mr. Jamaloddin Khanjani, Mr. Afif Naeimi, Mr. Saeid Rezaie, Mr. Behrouz Tavakkoli, Mrs. Mahvash Sabet, and Mr. Vahid Tizfahm, the seven members of the ad hoc leadership group for the Baha'i community in Iran;

Whereas, in August 2010, the Revolutionary Court in Tehran sentenced the seven Baha'i leaders to 20-year prison terms on charges of “spying for Israel, insulting religious sanctities, propaganda against the regime and spreading corruption on earth”;

Whereas the lawyer for these seven leaders, Mrs. Shirin Ebadi, the Nobel Laureate, was denied meaningful or timely access to the prisoners and their files, and her successors as defense counsel were provided extremely limited access;

Whereas these seven Baha'i leaders were targeted solely on the basis of their religion;

Whereas, beginning in May 2011, Government of Iran officials in four cities conducted sweeping raids on the homes of dozens of individuals associated with the Baha'i Institute for Higher Education (BIHE) and arrested and detained several educators associated with BIHE;

Whereas, in October 2011, the Revolutionary Court in Tehran sentenced seven of these BIHE instructors and administrators, Mr. Vahid Mahmoudi, Mr. Kamran Mortezaie, Mr. Mahmoud Badavam, Ms. Nooshin Khadem, Mr. Farhad Sedghi, Mr. Riaz Sobhani, and Mr. Ramin Zibaie, to prison terms for the crime of “membership of the deviant sect of Baha'ism, with the goal of taking action against the security of the country, in order to further the aims of the deviant sect and those of organizations outside the country”;

Whereas six of these educators remain imprisoned, with Mr. Mortezaie serving a 5-year prison term and Mr. Badavam, Ms. Khadem, Mr. Sedghi, Mr. Sobhani, and Mr. Zibaie serving 4-year prison terms;

Whereas, since October 2011, four other BIHE educators have been arrested and imprisoned, with Ms. Faran Hessami, Mr. Kamran Rahimian, and Mr. Shahin Negari serving 4-year prison terms, and Mr. Kayvan Rahimian serving a 5-year prison term;

Whereas the efforts of the Government of Iran to collect information on individual Baha'is have recently intensified as evidenced by a letter, dated November 5, 2011, from the Director of the Department of Education in the county of Shahriar in the province of Tehran, instructing the directors of schools in his jurisdiction to “subtly and in a confidential manner” collect information on Baha'i students;

Whereas the Baha'i community continues to undergo intense economic and social pressure, including an ongoing campaign in the town of Semnan, where the Government of Iran has harassed and detained Baha'is, closed 17 Baha'i owned businesses in the last three years, and imprisoned several members of the community, including three mothers along with their infants;

Whereas ordinary Iranian citizens who belong to the Baha'i Faith are disproportionately targeted, interrogated, and detained under the pretext of national security;

Whereas the Government of Iran is party to the International Covenants on Human Rights and is in violation of its obligations under the Covenants; and

Whereas the Comprehensive Iran Sanctions, Accountability, and Divestment Act of 2010 (Public Law 111-195) authorizes the President and the Secretary of State to impose sanctions on individuals “responsible for or complicit in, or responsible for ordering, controlling, or otherwise directing, the commission of serious human rights abuses against citizens of Iran or their family members on or after June 12, 2009”: Now, therefore, be it]

Whereas, in 1982, 1984, 1988, 1990, 1992, 1994, 1996, 2000, 2006, 2008, 2009, 2012, and 2013, Congress declared that it deplored the religious persecution by the Government of Iran of the Baha'i community and would hold the Government of Iran responsible for upholding the rights of all Iranian nationals, including members of the Baha'i Faith;

Whereas the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom 2013 Report found that Baha'i marriages and divorces are not recognized and Baha'i holy places and community properties are often seized or destroyed, and stated, “The Baha'i community faces severe economic pressure, including denials of jobs in both the public and private sectors and of business licenses. Iranian authorities often pressure employers of Baha'is to dismiss them from private sector employment.”;

Whereas the Department of State 2012 International Religious Freedom Report stated that the Government of Iran “prohibits Baha'is from teaching and practicing their faith and subjects them to many forms of discrimination not faced by members of other religious groups” and “requires Baha'is to register with the police”;

Whereas the Department of State 2012 International Religious Freedom Report stated that “[t]he government raided Baha'i homes and businesses and confiscated large amounts of private and commercial property, as well as religious materials,” and found that “Baha'is are regularly denied compensation for injury or criminal victimization”;

Whereas the Department of State 2012 International Religious Freedom Report stated that “[t]he government, since the Islamic Revolution, formally denies Baha'i students access to higher education,” and “[p]ublic and private universities continued to deny admittance and expel Baha'i students”;

Whereas, on May 23, 2012, the United Nations Secretary-General issued a report (A/HRC/19/82), which stated that “the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief . . . pointed out that the Islamic Republic of Iran had a policy of systematic persecution of persons belonging to the Baha'i faith, excluding them from the application of freedom of religion or belief by simply denying that their faith had the status of a religion”;

Whereas, on November 27, 2012, the Third Committee of the United Nations General Assembly adopted a draft resolution (A/C.3/67/L.51), which noted, “[I]ncreased persecution and human rights violations against persons belonging to unrecognized religious minorities, particularly members of the Baha'i [Faith and their defenders, including escalating attacks, an increase in the number of arrests and detentions, the restriction of access to higher education on the basis of religion, the sentencing of twelve Baha'is associated with Baha'i educational institutions to lengthy prison terms, the continued denial of access to employment in the public sector, additional restrictions on participation in the private sector, and the de facto criminalization of membership in the Baha'i [Faith.”;

Whereas, on December 20, 2012, the United Nations General Assembly adopted a resolution (A/RES/67/182), which called upon the government of Iran “[t]o eliminate discrimination against, and exclusion of . . . members of the Baha'i Faith, regarding access to higher education, and to eliminate the criminalization of efforts to provide higher education to Baha'i youth denied access to Iranian universities,” and “to accord all Baha'is, including those imprisoned because of their beliefs, the due process of law and the rights that they are constitutionally guaranteed”;

Whereas, on February 28, 2013, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran issued a report (A/HRC/22/56), which stated that “110 Baha'is are currently detained in Iran for exercising their faith,” and found that Baha'is in the cities of Semnan, Gorgan, and Hamadan have especially faced increasing persecution over the last three years, including raids, arrests, physical violence, arson, vandalism to their homes, business, and grave sites, and government closings of Baha'i-owned businesses;

Whereas, on February 28, 2013, the United Nations Secretary-General issued a report (A/HRC/22/48), which stated, "An ongoing anti-Baha'i media campaign resulted in increasing attacks on its members and their properties. This national campaign that consists of [a]nti-Baha'i pamphlets, posters, seminars and the broadcasting of anti-Baha'i speeches on radio networks appears to be tacitly condoned by the authorities. In addition, anti-Baha'i speeches [were] reportedly delivered to different audiences including schools, youth organizations and the general public.";

Whereas, on October 4, 2013, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in the Islamic Republic of Iran issued a report (A/68/503), which stated, "The Special Rapporteur continues to observe what appears to be an escalating pattern of systematic human rights violations targeting members of the Baha'i community, who face arbitrary detention, torture and ill-treatment, national security charges for active involvement in religious affairs, restrictions on religious practice, denial of higher education, obstacles to State employment and abuses within schools.";

Whereas, in March and May of 2008, intelligence officials of the Government of Iran in Mashhad and Tehran arrested and imprisoned Mrs. Fariba Kamalabadi, Mr. Jamaloddin Khanjani, Mr. Afif Naeimi, Mr. Saeid Rezaie, Mr. Behrouz Tavakkoli, Mrs. Mahvash Sabet, and Mr. Vahid Tizfahm, the seven members of the ad hoc leadership group for the Baha'i community in Iran, known as the Yaran-i-Iran, or "friends of Iran";

Whereas, in August 2010, the Revolutionary Court in Tehran sentenced the seven Baha'i leaders to 20-year prison terms, the longest sentences given to any current prisoners of conscience in Iran, on charges of "spying for Israel, insulting religious sanctities, propaganda against the regime and spreading corruption on earth";

Whereas the lawyer for these seven leaders, Mrs. Shirin Ebadi, the Nobel Laureate, was denied meaningful or timely access to the prisoners and their files, and her colleagues and successors as defense counsel were provided extremely limited access, and Ms. Ebadi stated that there was no evidence to sustain the charges against the seven;

Whereas, on May 13, 2013, four United Nations human rights experts, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Iran, Ahmed Shaheed, the head of the Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, El Hadji Malick Sow, the Special Rapporteur on freedom of religion or belief, Heiner Bielefeldt, and the Independent Expert on Minorities issues, Rita Izásk, released a statement "call[ing] on the Iranian authorities for the immediate release of seven Baha'i community leaders, known as the Yaran, nearing the fifth anniversary of their arrests, whose detentions were declared arbitrary by the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention, on 20 November 2008";

Whereas, beginning in May 2011, Government of Iran officials in four cities conducted sweeping raids on the homes of dozens of individuals associated with the Baha'i Institute for Higher Education (BIHE) and arrested and detained several educators associated with BIHE;

Whereas, in October 2011, the Revolutionary Court in Tehran sentenced seven of these BIHE instructors and administrators, Mr. Vahid Mahmoudi, Mr. Kamran Mortezaie, Mr. Mahmoud Badavam, Ms. Nooshin Khadem, Mr. Farhad Sedghi, Mr. Riaz Sobhani, and Mr. Ramin Zibaie, to prison terms for the crime of "membership of the deviant sect of Baha'ism, with the goal of taking action against the security of the country, in order to further the aims of the deviant sect and those of organizations outside the country," with six of them remaining imprisoned;

Whereas, since October 2011, six other BIHE educators have been arrested and imprisoned, with Ms. Faran Hessami, Mr. Kamran Rahimian, and Mr. Shahin Negari serving 4-year prison terms, and Mr. Kayvan Rahimian, Dr. Foad Moghaddam, and Mr. Amanollah Mostaghim serving 5-year prison terms;

Whereas the efforts of the Government of Iran to collect information on individual Baha'is have recently intensified as evidenced by a letter, dated November 5, 2011, from the Director of the Department of Education in the county of Shahriar in the province of Tehran, instructing the directors of schools in his jurisdiction to "subtly and in a confidential manner" collect information on Baha'i students;

Whereas, since September 2013, the Government of Iran has imprisoned four Baha'i mothers, Taraneh Torabi, Zohreh Nikayin, Neda Majidi, and Elham Rouzbehi, along with their infant children, and Ms. Torabi, Ms. Nikayin, and Ms. Rouzbehi remain imprisoned with their children;

Whereas, on August 24, 2013, Mr. Ataollah Rezvani, an active member of the Baha'i community of Bandar Abbas, Iran, was found shot in his car on the outskirts of the city, in what may be a religiously motivated murder during a time of increased pressure on Iran's religious minorities and a surge in anti-Baha'i rhetoric by various clerics;

Whereas, in September 2013, the Government of Iran released a number of prisoners of conscience, and none of the prisoners released were known to be Baha'is;

Whereas the Government of Iran is party to the International Covenants on Human Rights and is in violation of its obligations under the Covenants; and

Whereas the Comprehensive Iran Sanctions, Accountability, and Divestment Act of 2010 (Public Law 111-195) authorizes the President and the Secretary of State to impose sanctions on individuals "responsible for or complicit in, or responsible for ordering, controlling, or otherwise directing, the commission of serious human rights abuses against citizens of Iran or their family members on or after June 12, 2009": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) condemns the Government of Iran for its state-sponsored persecution of its Baha'i minority and its continued violation of the International Covenants on Human Rights;

(2) calls on the Government of Iran to immediately release the seven imprisoned leaders, the [ten] twelve imprisoned educators, and all other prisoners held solely on account of their religion;

(3) calls on the President and Secretary of State, in cooperation with responsible nations, to immediately condemn the Government of Iran's continued violation of human rights and demand the immediate release of prisoners held solely on account of their religion; and

(4) urges the President and Secretary of State to utilize all available authorities, including the Comprehensive Iran Sanctions, Accountability, and Divestment Act of 2010, to impose sanctions on officials of the Government of Iran and other individuals directly responsible for serious human rights abuses, including abuses against the Baha'i community of Iran.

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment or recess of the Senate from Friday, December 20 to Monday, January 6, the majority leader and Senators WARNER and ROCKEFELLER be authorized to sign duly enrolled bills or joint resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE MAJORITY LEADER

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, as I mentioned earlier today, I spoke with Majority Leader REID this morning. He sounds hale and hearty and anxious to get home and then back to work. We look forward to that happening when he returns to his desk early in the new year in 2014.

CLOSING THE FIRST SESSION OF THE 113TH CONGRESS

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, there are many traditions around this holiday season that I cherish, but I must confess that the tradition of spending Christmas Eve or New Year's Eve on the floor of the Senate is not one of those traditions. Happily, this year we won't be repeating that practice from previous years. We are leaving here shortly—some have already—to spend the holidays at home with family.

As we close this first session of the 113th Congress, I wish to personally thank our majority leader Senator HARRY REID—and let me add his wife Landra—for their leadership and their resolve that helps to make this Senate work.

I also thank the minority leader Senator MITCH MCCONNELL. Although we may disagree on many issues and have our debates on the floor of the Senate, I have a great respect for my colleagues and particularly their leader Senator MCCONNELL. We all know we can't do this work alone. It takes a lot of dedicated people to keep the Senate functioning.

On behalf of Leader REID, I wish to acknowledge and thank the Senate Parliamentarians and clerical staff and doorkeepers. I also thank the cloakroom staffs, the members of our floor staffs who put in even longer than usual hours these past few weeks, and all of the Senate staffers, Democratic and Republican.

I thank the Capitol Police officers for keeping us safe. We have to remember they risk their lives every day for us and all the people who work and visit this great Capitol.

A special thanks to our Senate pages. We ask a lot of them—long hours for a lot of young people. We want them to know that their work is greatly appreciated. We wish them the best of luck. They will be coming back in January to finish their current assignment as pages. I hope they have a great time at home with their families. Perhaps someday they will return here, maybe as Senators themselves.

Part of the magic of this holiday season is that it enables many of us, even just for a few moments, to consider a new world, to look at it with a little less cynicism. I hope all of my colleagues will have a few moments like that in the coming holidays, and I hope we are all going to come back and try to preserve some small measure of good will and make it part of our life's work in the next year of the Senate session.

The budget agreement we passed this week was a good beginning to a less partisan, more productive Senate. I hope that is a portent of good things to come.

There is a lot more we need to do. The American people are still counting on us to work together on measures that will help to create good jobs and strengthen America's economy, strengthen working families in Wisconsin and Illinois and all across America.

And particularly at this Christmas-time, let's remember the message of Pope Francis and religious leaders all over the world: to remember the needy and the help they need that we can provide and must provide in this caring world.

We all only serve in this body for a finite period of time. After we are gone, we want to look back on our service in the Senate and we all want to be able to say: I was part of something important. I helped meet the great challenges of my time, and I helped to preserve the American dream. I hope that is part of our new year's resolve on both sides of the aisle.

SENATE AGENDA

When we return in January, the Senate will continue working on nominations, starting with confirmation of Janet Yellen to head the Federal Reserve when we vote on January 6. Our first order of legislative business will be to vote to extend unemployment benefits for those who have exhausted their benefits and still can't find work through no fault of their own. This is a matter of simple fairness. It affects more than 1 million Americans and their families. We will not give up on them and on our responsibility to help them through this difficult time.

In closing, let me wish all of my fellow Senators and our staffs, those who transcribe our remarks, and many others who make the Senate work every single day, as well as our fellow Americans, a Merry Christmas, Happy Holidays, and a Happy New Year.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, DECEMBER 24, 2013 THROUGH MONDAY, JANUARY 6, 2014

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn and convene for pro forma sessions only with no business conducted on the following dates and times and that following each pro forma session, the Senate adjourn until the next pro forma session, unless the Senate receives a message from the House that it has adopted S. Con. Res. 30, the Senate adjourn until Friday, January 3, at 11:45 a.m. for a pro forma session only with no business conducted, and that following the pro forma session, the Senate adjourn until 2 p.m., on Monday, January 6, 2014; that on Monday, January 6, 2014, following the prayer and pledge, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, and the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day; and that following any leader remarks, the Senate resume consideration of the motion to proceed to S. 1845, the unemployment insurance extension, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each; further, that at 3 p.m., the Senate proceed to executive session to resume consideration of Executive Calendar No. 452, the nomination of Janet Yellen to be Chairman of the Federal Reserve System, with the time until 5:30 p.m. equally divided and controlled in the usual form prior to a vote on confirmation of the Yellen nomination; and, finally, that following the vote on confirmation of the Yellen nomination, the Senate resume legislative session and proceed to vote on cloture on the motion to proceed to S. 1845, the unemployment insurance extension bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, there will be two rollcall votes beginning at 5:30 p.m., on Monday, January 6.

CONDITIONAL ADJOURNMENT UNTIL TUESDAY, DECEMBER 24, 2013

Mr. DURBIN. Madam President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that it adjourn under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:10 p.m., conditionally adjourned until Tuesday, December 24, 2013, at 12 noon.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TO CONGRATULATE LANGHORNE BOROUGH MAYOR CHRIS BLAYDON

HON. MICHAEL G. FITZPATRICK

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Langhorne Borough's Mayor Chris Blaydon on a long career of public service. Mayor Chris Blaydon and his wife, Mary, have lived in Bucks County for 50 years. In that time, he has helped shape the community as a volunteer, borough councilman, mayor, and 30-year member of the borough Shadetree Commission. We sincerely commend him for his honorable service to our community as well as to our Nation as a U.S. Air Force pilot and later, as a Pan America pilot. Because of his appreciation for the historical significance of Bucks County, for the last 37 years, he has participated in the re-enactment of Gen. George Washington's crossing of the Delaware River on December 26, 1776 during the Battle of Trenton. Therefore, as Chris Blaydon concludes his mayoral career, we thank and wish him good health and many new adventures.

HONORING DEVLIN L. HODGES

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Devlin L. Hodges came to Yonkers from Richmond, Va., where he was born via New York City. While in New York, in 1975, he became a Police Department Associate and was assigned to the Lower East Side of Manhattan during one of the worst times in the city's crime era. After three years he joined the New York State Department of Correctional Services and two years later joined the City's Department of Corrections.

There he blossomed, becoming a Captain in 1988, and an Assistant Deputy Warden before retiring in 1998. He currently is a Security Officer with the Jewish Home and Healthcare Organization.

He is a member of the James H. Farrell Lodge of the Masons since 1994, starting as a Junior Steward and then appointed as Secretary of the Lodge. In 2007 he was elected to the esteemed office of Worshipful Master and while serving in that capacity he was elected President of the Masters and Wardens Council of the Third Masonic District.

From there he returned to the office of Secretary of the Lodge, a position he has held since.

In 2008 he received his thirty-second degree of Freemasonry when he became a member of Pentecost Consistory #98 of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons, Prince Hall Affiliated of the Northern Jurisdiction. In 2009 he was appointed District Deputy Grand Lecturer of the Most Worshipful Prince Hall Grand Lodge of the Most Ancient and Honorable Fraternity and Accepted Masons, serving in that position since.

He has served in many positions of responsibility in the Masons and it is through his leadership that the Luther V. Garrison, Sr. Masonic Foundation was formed. He has served as president of the Foundation from its founding in 2008.

Devlin Hodges has served his community wisely and well for many years and I am proud to join the Luther V. Garrison, Sr. Foundation in honoring him as Man of the Year.

HONORING SCARSDALE MEDICAL GROUP

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, the Scarsdale Medical Group began in 1957 when Kenneth Roth, MD, joined Herman Tarnower, MD, and John Cannon MD, both of whom had been associated since World War II, to start a practice of medicine in Scarsdale Village.

After his return from military service in the late 1950s, Tarnower purchased land near the "five corners" in Scarsdale and erected a two-story medical building at 259 Heathcote Road. He envisioned a six-member medical group of internists with varying subspecialties. The building was finished in 1960 and its roster of six physicians was completed by July 1961, with the addition of Roderick A. Granzen, MD, and James L. Carvelas, MD—internists who had been in practice in White Plains—and Marvin M. Lipman, MD, fresh out of a research fellowship.

That nucleus remained intact for nearly 15 years, when three more doctors joined. In 1980, tragedy struck when Tarnower, who had achieved international fame as the author of The Scarsdale Medical Diet, was murdered.

Over the following years five of the original members left and five others joined. Of the original members only Dr. Lipman remains.

With the start of this century SMG grew exponentially, adding 31 physicians in 10 years.

By 2007, the need for expansion was acute. Space was leased on Mamaroneck Avenue in Harrison, allowing the Heathcote Road property to be temporarily vacated for needed repairs.

SMG's growth was steered by a committee of several members of the partnership and the executive director, Maria Trusa. She joined SMG in 1987 as a medical assistant, advanced to manager by 1992, and was named Executive Director.

Over the 57 years, SMG has served Scarsdale and the surrounding community, growing from the original six physicians to its present complement of 39. SMG expanded to treat patients after hours and on weekends and holidays. For urgent care, no appointment is necessary. SMG renders primary care, plus dermatology, neurology, nutrition and podiatry services as well as virtually all of the subspecialties of internal medicine, and obstetrics/gynecology services.

In 2012, SMG was awarded the designation of Medical Home by the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality of the Department of Health and Human Services.

I congratulate the Scarsdale Medical Group on its decades of medical service to the community and celebrate the reopening of their Heathcote Road offices, allowing even more services for Scarsdale and its environs.

HONORING JEFFREY A. MOERDLER

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Jeffrey A. Moerdler is being honored by the Riverdale Jewish Community Relations Council for his extraordinary work on behalf of Riverdale's Jewish community, including his 27 years of service on the Riverdale Y Board, his past service as President of the Y, more recently of the Y's President's Advisory Council, and his work as a Vice President of the Riverdale Jewish Community Council.

More significant on a basic level is his commitment to Hatzalah, the largest volunteer ambulance service in the United States, as an Emergency Medical Technician responding to 150–200 emergency medical calls per year, principally in Riverdale. He is also a Coordinator (co-president) of the Riverdale Hatzalah chapter and is a member of the Executive Board of the Citywide Hatzalah organization. He was part of the aid response when Captain "Sully" Sullenberger landed his airplane in the Hudson River. Most significantly, he has six "saves," four in cardiac arrests and two in chokings, as well as having participated in the delivery of one baby in the field.

In his day job, Mr. Moerdler is head of Mintz, Levin, Cohn, Ferris, Glovsky and Popeo, P.C.'s Real Estate and Communications practices in New York. He has been recognized as a New York Super Lawyer for real estate in the New York Times every year since 2006 and in Best Lawyers in America for Real Estate in 2013–14.

He is a Commissioner of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, Vice Chair of its Audit and Security Committees and its Insurance Working Group, and takes an active role as the lead board member on many of its largest real estate transactions at the World Trade Center site.

Plus, he does a substantial amount of pro bono legal work for a variety of Jewish and community service organizations.

Jeffrey Moerdler has demonstrated an extraordinary commitment to his community and his fellow human beings for three decades. I am proud to join with the Riverdale Jewish Community Relations Council in honoring him with its Community Service Award.

HONORING WAKEFIELD TAX-PAYERS & CIVIC LEAGUE 100TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, citizens groups are the backbone of a democracy, banding together to make their lives, their neighborhoods, their country a better place.

I am privileged to have one such extraordinary group in my district, the Wakefield Taxpayers and Civic League, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary. It was formed in 1913 to "maintain the integrity of the community" and is one of the oldest such organizations in New York City.

The League involves itself in improving their community by, for example, getting the outer walls of P.S.W. 1 repaired; getting the retaining wall abutting a playground on Carpenter Avenue, in danger of falling, fixed; advocated successfully for the closing of 'topless' bars in a residential neighborhood; initiated a study to change zoning regulations that allowed motels to be built in residential areas; and fought illegal construction and illegal rentals in two- and three-family homes.

The League maintains a lively and deep interest in politics and I have appeared before them many times seeking their endorsement, as have any other person seriously seeking to represent them.

Wakefield is a beautiful community because its residents work hard to keep it so. The League works closely with the District Attorney's Crime Assistance unit and has a Wakefield Civilian patrol to deter crime. It has stopped crimes in progress, alerted the Fire Department to fires, and saves lives by bringing medical attention to accident scenes.

The Wakefield Taxpayers and Civic League is a model of what citizens can accomplish by working together in their neighborhoods. I am proud to be associated with them and congratulate them for 100 years of building and maintaining a model community.

HONORING HITCHCOCK
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Houses of Worship have been central to American communities since the founding of our country. One such House of Worship, the Hitchcock Presbyterian Church in Scarsdale, is now celebrating its centenary.

In 1913, a group of 19 gathered to worship in a portable chapel borrowed from the Presbytery of Hudson River and set on the corner of Walworth Avenue and Fenimore Road. The Reverend George Smyth helped that group organize Hitchcock Presbyterian Church, build a sanctuary, organize the Sunday School, Women's Guild, Missionary Society and Women's Prayer Group.

In 1949 Dr. Smyth retired and the Reverend Dr. Robert W. Youngs was installed as senior pastor. By then increased attendance necessitated two worship services each Sunday.

In 1959 the Reverend James S. Stewart became senior pastor and served until 1972. During these years the Weekday School was begun and the three women's organizations merged to form the Guild, and in 1991 became the Presbyterian Women of Hitchcock.

The Reverend J. Scottie Griffin became senior pastor in July 1975 and served until 1982. The growing Asian population in this area stimulated the development of the Living in America program to serve the international community.

In September 1983 the Reverend Robert S. MacLennan became senior pastor and served until December 31, 1992. During his ministry there was increased dialogue with the local Jewish community. In 1984 Special Ministries to Japanese, an interdenominational ministry to Japanese-speaking people in the metropolitan area, began holding Japanese language worship once a month.

In 1986 a fire destroyed the sanctuary building but not the program or the mission of Hitchcock Church. The rebuilding was completed and a sanctuary dedicated on October 7, 1990.

In May, 1995 the Reverend Donald J. Steele became the pastor. During his 10 year ministry, the church became very active in mission work and supported "Beyond Borders"—a literacy program in Haiti.

The congregation called The Rev. Dr. John W. Miller of Dallas as new pastor and he began his ministry in 2008.

I congratulate the Hitchcock Presbyterian Church on the celebration of 100 years of serving its congregants. The church has contributed enormously to its worshippers and I wish it many more years in our community.

HONORING THE ACHIEVEMENTS OF BEAR CREEK HIGH SCHOOL'S STUDENT JOURNALISTS

HON. JERRY McNERNEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. McNERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor Bear Creek High School's newspaper, The Bruin Voice, which has been recognized as the best in the Nation. The Bruin Voice recently won the prestigious National Scholastic Press Association's Pacemaker Award for excellence, in addition to receiving Best in Show for its coverage of student protests.

The student journalists at Bear Creek High School put a tremendous amount of effort toward producing a newspaper of outstanding quality. They have displayed exceptional writing and reporting skills and have produced compelling editorials and cartoons. The accomplishments of Bear Creek High School's student journalists are emblematic of their pursuit of excellence and commitment to their fellow students, faculty and our community.

I urge my colleagues to join me in recognizing Bear Creek High School's journalism students, and their extraordinary dedication to producing an award-winning newspaper.

HONORING EILEEN MASON

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Eileen Mason arrived in Larchmont in 1968 in pursuit of a good local school for her three year-old daughter, Alison, and later a son, Gregory. Eileen was very active in the PTA. As Health and Safety Chair at the Murray Avenue School, she spearheaded the drive which although failing to reinstall the traffic light, resulted in the school system's first school crossing guard.

From 1972 to 1983 she worked to create after school clubs for "latch-key kids" and help mainstream students with disabilities. In 1980, she was chair of the Middle States High School Evaluation team for School and Community.

Eileen became interested in the cable franchise proposals in the late 'seventies while doing publicity for several local organizations including the Girl Scouts, The Garden Club of Larchmont, the Woman's Club of Larchmont and the PTA. Offering news to the community has been the focus of her thirty years with LMC-TV.

Her own original programs started with "It's Your Community" and the establishment of water control measures at the Reservoir and coastal zone management and environmental concerns. She produced a series on Save the Sound, a Connecticut organization based in Stamford, as well as programs for the Federated Conservationists of Westchester County.

Other organizations benefitting from her coverage are the League of Woman Voters, Summit, Cancer Support Team, Girl Scouts, Kemper Memorial Park Preservation, Hispanic Resource Center, Mamaroneck Library's Children's Department and Larchmont Public Library's Friends, Rye Arts Center, Memorial Day and Holocaust Memorial events.

For the past twelve years she has produced monthly programs for Larchmont-Mamaroneck Interfaith Council. I congratulate Eileen Mason who is being awarded the Special Recognition Award for her extraordinary contributions to LMC-TV productions as a volunteer.

HONORING ALPHA EPSILON PI
INTERNATIONAL FRATERNITY

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I extend my congratulations to the Alpha Epsilon Pi International Fraternity on the celebration of its centenary. With more than 177 active chapters across the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, France, and Israel, and over 9,000 undergraduate brothers, there is certainly much to celebrate.

The fraternity is celebrating the largest event in its history—the Centennial Celebration on August 8th honoring the first 100 years of its existence and its success in cultivating generations of Jewish leaders on college campuses across the world.

The first 100 years are said to be the hardest, but the success of Alpha Epsilon Pi is a wonderful start.

I wish the fraternity every success in the future and look forward to seeing more leaders from Alpha Epsilon Pi take their place in the world.

AEPI was founded in 1913 at New York University, initially as a brotherhood of young men from similar backgrounds, but expanded in time with the goal of giving them the best college and fraternity experience. Since then approximately 100,000 men have been members of the fraternity.

More important is the leadership training provided by AEPI. Its members include Wolf Blitzer, Mark Zuckerberg, former Florida Congressman Ron Klein, National Hockey League Commissioner Gary Bettman, James Brooks, a producer/director of The Simpsons, Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel, and architect Frank Gehry, plus numberless more.

Celebrating a Centennial is a rare event. AEPI has contributed to the nation and the world for 100 years and if past performance is any indication, this will continue for many generations to come.

HONORING YONKERS COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, the Yonkers Commission on Human Rights is celebrating 50 years of working to affirm the rights of all citizens to full equality before the law as part of its commitment to eliminating racism and to empowering women.

The Commission on Human Rights was created on October 1, 1963, by the City of Yonkers with a charter that delineated the need for protection from human rights violations and the essence of human rights education for Yonkers residents and businesses alike.

The organization actively promotes human rights awareness and outreach in the Yonkers community through special events and activities, serving as a model for dialogue, discussion and coalition building to eliminate racism and intergroup hostilities.

The Yonkers Human Rights Commission fosters mutual respect and understanding among all racial, religious, and ethnic groups in the community, and strives to eliminate all forms of discrimination based on sex or age. It undertakes studies that aid in improving relationships among groups. It inquires into incidents of tension and conflict among or between various racial, religious, and nationality groups, and takes action to ease such tensions and conflicts.

The Human Rights Commission not only seeks to alleviate tensions but to actively promote goodwill among neighbors and communities.

For a half century the Yonkers Human Rights Commission has worked for equality for all in employment, housing, public accommodation, credit, and education. It is an outstanding example of what can be accomplished locally to enhance all of our lives. I am proud to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Yonkers Commission on Human Rights, and congratulate it for the work done for our community.

HONORING AUDREY SMITH-
JOHNSON

As a high school student, she volunteered at the Yonkers YWCA and was a Candy Striper at St. Joseph Hospital. But it was while working various positions at a temp agency that she found her passion in real estate. She received her Real Estate Certificate and has been working in that field for 28 years.

But she has another calling, and that is as a member of her community. In July, 2005, she joined Community Sunset Temple #1132, Daughters of Elks, LBPOE Elks of the World. She was promptly elected as Doorkeeper and in 2006 she was elected as the Treasurer. There she has embraced in all facets of Elksdom. I am proud to join the Luther V. Garrison Sr. Masonic Foundation in honoring Audrey Smith-Johnson as Woman of the Year for her many contributions to her community.

REV. EDWARD MULRAINE

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, December 23, 2013

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, Houses of Worship in the United States have played a major role in our communities, offering solace, support, and sustenance, both physical and moral, to all. In Mount Vernon, the Unity Baptist Tabernacle, under the guidance of the Rev. Edward Mulraine fulfils all those roles, and today we are celebrating Rev. Mulraine's tenth Pastoral Anniversary in guiding the membership of his church.

Rev. Mulraine has accomplished much in that time to help his Church, his Ministry and his Community.

He established a Men's Fellowship Choir, a Prayer Ministry, a Senior Ministry, and the Gospel Pearls. He expanded the Church's Ministry through radio station WVOV and the Internet. He instituted Women as Deacons and Unity Baptist Tabernacle saw its first Women Deacons in 2011. Unity Tabernacle now teaches Weekly Bible Study and has a Drama Ministry and a Catering Ministry.

More pragmatically Rev. Mulraine raised the funds for a new computer center which now has 14 brand new computers, installed new air conditioning in the Dining Hall, painted the sanctuary and redid the Church roof, and is paying off the $300,000 mortgage.

Beyond his church and ministry, Rev. Mulraine has aided his community by getting pedestrian crossing lights on local streets, marching against violence, and protesting cuts to Day Care and Mount Vernon Hospital. He established the Annual Church Trip and Fellowship to South Carolina, started Home Coming after Summer Break, and fought for funds for the South Street Park.

Rev. Mulraine, and all of Mount Vernon, today celebrate his tenth anniversary as Minister of the Unity Baptist Tabernacle. I am proud to join in this celebration of a man who has made a great difference in his Church, his Ministry and his Community.

Mr. HOYER led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

lic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

PROVIDING FOR A CONDITIONAL ADJOURNMENT OR RECESS OF THE SENATE AND AN ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following privileged concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) providing for a conditional adjournment or recess of the Senate and an adjournment of the House of Representatives.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 30

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That when the Senate recesses or adjourns on any day from Friday, December 20, 2013, through Tuesday, December 31, 2013, on a motion offered pursuant to this concurrent resolution by its Majority Leader or his designee, it stand adjourned until 11:45 a.m. on Friday, January 3, 2014, or until the time of any reassembly pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the House adjourns on any legislative day from Monday, December 23, 2013, through Tuesday, December 31, 2013, on a motion offered pursuant to this concurrent resolution by its Majority Leader or his designee, it stand adjourned until 11:00 a.m. on Friday, January 3, 2014, or until the time of any reassembly pursuant to section 3 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. (a) The Majority Leader of the Senate or his designee, after consultation with the Minority Leader of the Senate, shall notify the Members of the Senate to reassemble at such place and time he may designate if, in his opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

(b) After reassembling pursuant to subsection (a), when the Senate adjourns on a motion offered pursuant to this subsection by the Majority Leader or his designee, the Senate shall again stand adjourned pursuant to the first section of this concurrent resolution.

SEC. 3. (a) The Speaker or his designee, after consultation with the Minority Leader of the House, shall notify the Members of the House to reassemble at such place and time he may designate if, in his opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

(b) After reassembling pursuant to subsection (a), when the House adjourns on a motion offered pursuant to this subsection by the Speaker or his designee, the House shall again stand adjourned pursuant to the first section of this concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the concurrent resolution is concurred in.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, arguably, Mr. Speaker, this Congress is the least productive one in which I have served over the last 33 years. Both from a humanitarian standpoint and an economic one, this Congress has earned the disdain of the American people irrespective of their party affiliation.

I rise, Mr. Speaker, specifically to express my and the Democratic minority's strong objection to adjourning this first session of the 113th Congress without extending unemployment insurance eligibility for the 1.3 million Americans, including 20,000 military veterans, who will lose that support in just 48 hours. This number will increase by 73,000 people, on average, every week that we continue to block an extension.

That is both a moral outrage and another congressionally inflicted blow to our economy, and it is unprecedented. Whenever unemployment levels have been as they are today, the Congress has extended benefits.

It is, sadly, consistent with our failure to pass meaningful jobs legislation proposed by the President.

It is, sadly, consistent with our failure to pass comprehensive immigration reform, which is broadly supported by business, labor, farmers, farm workers, and an overwhelming number of religious leaders and members of the faith community.

It is, sadly, consistent with our failure to pass a farm bill, which could give confidence to those in dire need of help putting food on their families' tables that this Congress will not abandon them; and ironically, Mr. Speaker, we do so at the very time that our Nation celebrates a message of giving and hope.

All this we leave undone after passing a so-called budget "compromise," whose only virtue was that it was slightly better than the draconian and the irrational sequester—condemned on both sides of the aisle as unworkable, unrealistic, and ill-conceived. So, it is a so-called "compromise" that will be tested in just a few short weeks and which failed to assure that America will pay its bills in the months ahead.

Mr. Speaker, if I thought objecting to this motion to adjourn by unanimous consent would lead to an extension of unemployment for the 1.3 million Americans who have been unable to find work or to a House leadership bringing to the floor issues that I have listed, I would object to this House adjourning with so much of the people's work undone, but sadly, Mr. Speaker, such an objection would have no such effect. I and my party deeply regret that reality.

Mr. Speaker, we will return in January of 2014, urging our Republican colleagues to address the needs of so many millions of Americans who want us to do the work they sent us here to do.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, sadly, I withdraw my reservation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the concurrent resolution is concurred in.

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TO COMMEMORATE THE 80TH BIRTHDAY OF MR. JAMES B.
HUMPHREYS

HON. MICHAEL G. FITZPATRICK

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, January 3, 2014

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, today I'd like to recognize the accomplishments of my constituent, Mr. James B. Humphreys, in light of the celebration of his 80th birthday on December 28th, 2013. Mr. Humphreys is a notable example of a hardworking community leader in Pennsylvania's 8th District, who is motivated to help make Bucks County the best place to live, work and raise a family.

As a Bristol resident and board member for “Visit Bucks County,” Mr. Humphreys has helped to increase visitation by bringing awareness to the long standing heritage, historical sites, and attractions that Bucks County has to offer. Tourism is a significant economic driver for our area, as it supports more than 11,000 jobs in the county each year. Because of people like Mr. Humphreys, thousands of visitors come to see our beautiful county.

Aside from his work with “Visit Bucks County,” many people in Bristol know and appreciate Mr. Humphreys because he is an up-standing citizen and a true patriot. I wish him many more years of health, happiness and success. Thanks for all you've done for our community—have a wonderful 80th birthday!
